When Greek meets Bulgarian, the Bulgarian doesn't tarry.
Strange to relate, Boston & Maine stock has gone up since Mellen's retreat.
Whatever faults some of his official family may have, Pres. Wilson has an able chauffeur.
Will the Pittsburg boy who confessed to setting four fires in a week go on a "hunger strike" just as soon as his prison term begins?

Lost one day, carried over a bank by auto the next—experiences of a president of the United States. My, what an exciting time Wilson is having up in New Hampshire!
The New York evening newspaper that is sending a man around the world in thirty-five days (if possible) knows the value of self advertising during an off season of the year.

Quincy, Mass., offered to pay 4 1/2 per cent., instead of 4%, on city bonds, yet did not receive a single bid for $50,000 municipal bonds. There must be a Quincy soreness somewhere.
Fifteen kegs of whiskey were found hidden in some bushes on Cushing's Island in Portland Harbor after the motor boat Juno was stranded on the rocks there in the early morning—News Item.

Now what have fifteen kegs of whiskey got to do in the prohibition state of Maine? They surely were not there to decorate the scenery.
Even if Secretary of State Bryan does go off on a six weeks' Chautauque speaking tour just when some of the important matters of state are coming before the United States, it is certain that the nation's interests will be as well looked after as if he were to be present, since John B. Moore, the expert, is to have charge of the business. S'long, Sec. Bryan!

His confidence shaken by the failure of a Pittsburg bank, a New York man drew $700 savings from his bank and, thinking there would be no use for his stove this time of the year, put the money inside the stove. Along comes wife with an ambition to do some ironing, starts up a fire and "puff" goes all but one hundred dollars of husband's hard-earned savings. A burning shame, you might call it, except you can't help blaming the man for utter foolishness.

PAYING "LIVING WAGES" TO AMBASSADORS.
The announcement that Ambassador Walter H. Page to the Court of St. James is still receiving his salary of $35,000 a year from "World's Work" in order to permit him to occupy the United States' chief post abroad, the salary of which is $17,500 a year, is not calculated to make Americans particularly proud of their system of representation abroad. If appointees to these positions are compelled to live on the gratuities of their former employers or to go into their own private fortunes in order to maintain themselves in foreign capitals, it is time that the United States increase the salaries of the offices to a degree something like the demands (reasonable demands) of the positions which they are called upon to occupy or else revise the standard of living which some of the American ambassadors have been following. Perhaps a little of both remedies would not come amiss just now when the matter has come prominently into attention through the reported action of Double-day, Page & Co. The United States probably can afford to pay a somewhat higher stipend for such an important work as the ambassador to the Court of St. James; but at the same time the United States cannot afford to send men abroad to be social lions of the royal courts of the foreign nations, nor do the people of the United States wish their ambassadors to be leaders in society of the countries to which they are assigned. The ambassadors are sent abroad to be keenly watchful of the interests of the United States in matters of diplomacy which may arise from time to time between their home country and the country to which each is sent. It is to be expected that a certain degree of social standing will be maintained but not to a lavish degree. Ambassador Page seemed to have the right idea of American desires as he started to cross the ocean to England, inasmuch as he left it to be implied that he did not intend to conduct the office in any such extravagant manner as his predecessor had done, merely intending to expend enough to give his tenure of the office the dignity commensurate with the great republic which he represented. It is to be regretted that Ambassador Page was compelled to call upon private donations to make that possible.

When a city the size of Barre has $6,500 of taxes unpaid, extending over a period of seven years, it makes one think that Waterbury's system—a paid collector who guarantees the tax—is the proper method.—Waterbury Record.
And yet the record in Barre is not so bad after all, when it is considered that each year the city is called upon to collect about $125,000 or, in seven years, in the vicinity of $875,000. We submit that the sum of $6,500 out of $875,000 is a remarkably small proportion of delinquent taxes. Reduced to the average, the total delinquent taxes in Barre for the seven years, as brought out at the recent meeting of the city council, shows $928.57 for each year.

When the shifting nature of a part of Barre's population is taken into consideration, it is good collecting that is able to bring the delinquent amount down to less than $1,000 a year. Waterbury may have a better system and may be able to collect its money closer; but, if so, it is largely due to the fact that Waterbury is smaller and its population is more easily kept track of. We call it more that Barre's taxes are quite well cleaned up considering some of the handicaps a larger place has.

CURRENT COMMENT

Vermont Road Building.
The task of road building and maintenance is not equally divided among the towns and cities of Vermont, by any means, though the state system helps to equalize it to a certain degree. There are 15,047 miles of public highway in Vermont. Some towns have as few as three or six miles only, while others have over 100 miles. The average is a little over sixty-one miles and the majority of the towns range about that figure. There are only eighteen towns in Vermont that have 100 miles or over, and eleven of these are in Orange and Wind-rail counties, as follows: Corinth, 106; Newbury, 116; Randolph, 120; Tunbridge, 100; Williamstown, 100; Chester, 110; Hartford, 129; Hartland, 108; Norwich, 104; Springfield, 123; Woodstock, 105. Of the more populous and wealthy places, Burlington has only to maintain 56 miles; Rutland, 33; Barre, 40; Montpelier, 50; St. Albans, 23. Compare the burden of such little towns as Corinth, Tunbridge, Hartland and Norwich with these big centers and more reason appears why the state as a whole should attack the road problem instead of leaving each town to fight it out separately. With over 15,000 miles in all, Vermont's task is no slight one, either.—Randolph Herald.

Fair Play For All.
Writing to the Boston Herald, Briggs S. Palmer states the well-known fact that the vast majority of those who drive automobiles try to obey the laws, "even though some of those laws seem rather unfair." He asks for agitation "until fair play is accorded to the careful automobilist."
There is not a doubt that ninety-five out of every hundred who operate automobiles under licenses by the commonwealth are careful. They are not speed-maniacs; they are not joy-riders; they're not car-shavers. They should and do have fair play. No man, organization or newspaper attacks the careful automobile driver. There is no ground for attack. The best service that can be done to the sane and careful driver is to wage war on him who is neither sane nor careful. The demand for still further restriction and control by law is due, not to the careful driver, but to the road-hogs.
The automobile has come to stay. It is a permanent institution. It makes for health and happiness, for enjoyment and comfort. Because of it, good roads are being built all over the country and first-class hotels are found where formerly the best were worse than third-class. Fair play for the careful driver, by all means, and fair play for the public, at the same time, against the speed-maniac.—Boston Traveler.

A Guide Post By the Way

"The richest per capita nation on earth is France. France isn't the greatest producing nation, but its wealth is entirely due to its SAVINGS. The greatest nation of individual efficiency is France, and its efficiency is entirely due to its SAVINGS. The people render themselves free from the immediate bread and butter problem and are free to individually protect their efficiency. Their great recuperative powers after the defeat of many wars have been due to their SAVINGS. Under defeat they have been faster to recover than the nation that defeated them, due entirely to THE SAVINGS OF THE PEOPLE."
