IN BOSTON MARKETS.

Supply of Eggs Does Not Exceed Demand—Prices Remain High. Boston, Nov. 26.—The local butter, cheese and egg markets show no special change from last reports. The supply of fresh eggs does not exceed the demand and no easing of prices is noted. Thanksgiving week is always marked by a good demand for eggs and this year is no exception, while firmer advices from outside markets also help to sustain local prices. Eggs butter, especially in small packages, keeps well cleaned up and firm in price and there is a fairly steady feeling in the undergrades, which, though plenty, are a little more active than they were recently. The movement of cheese continues rather slow, but holders are not forcing sales and prices hold quite steady.

Help the kidneys to do their work. Use Doan's Kidney Pills—the tested kidney remedy. Barre people endorse their worth. Mrs. Emma Gay, 8 Harrington street, Barre, Vt., says: "We have used Doan's Kidney Pills for many years and we have always found them reliable. My kidneys were weak and I had pains in my back. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they helped me greatly." Mrs. Gay is only one of many Barre people who have gratefully endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills. Gay had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 50c, all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y. "When Your Back Is Lame—Remember the Name."

CAUCUS ON CURRENCY

Conference Held by Senate Democrats Today

SENATOR HITCHCOCK PRAISES WILSON

Currency Reform Due to His Wisdom and Courage, He Says

Washington, Nov. 26.—The struggle in the open Senate over the administration's second great legislative measure, the currency bill, which was opened on Monday with a short statement by Senator Owen, the administration leader, was continued yesterday when Senator Hitchcock, also a Democrat, took up the defense of the substitute bill agreed upon by the opposition faction in the Senate banking committee. Although the bill presented by Chairman Owen had the approval of the administration in most of its particulars, many prominent Democratic senators were admittedly open to conviction upon the vital points which split the Senate committee.

A Democratic caucus will take up the subject later and attempt to reconcile differences and bring the party into accord upon a bill that will be acceptable to the House and to President Wilson. The forces led by Senator Hitchcock include all of the Republican members of the Senate banking committee. Many Democrats are favorable to those features of the Hitchcock bill, which include public ownership of the stock of the regional banks and a small number of those institutions. Senator Hitchcock said: "The president has merited and receives the praise of the whole country in bringing the matter before Congress and making currency reform an administration measure," he said. "His wisdom and courage in bringing this needed reform to a practical issue are to be highly commended. Nothing less than presidential influence would have made the reform possible for some time. I yield this tribute to the president the more readily because I have frankly opposed and criticized him when he urged hasty action, which I deem dangerous." Senate Democratic leaders decided to have a Democratic "conference" at 11:30 to-day on the currency bills. Democratic Leader Kern and Chairman Owen said it was not proposed to bind the Democrats to support any one bill at this time.

AFTER TICKET SPECULATORS.

Boston City Council To Ask Legislation To Drive Them Out. Boston, Nov. 26.—The city council will try to put a stop to theatre ticket speculation in Boston. The council has instructed the corporation counsel to prepare a draft of a bill to be introduced in the next legislature to make such speculation illegal.

THE BUSINESS FARMER'S CORNER

HIGHER PROFITS FROM MILK.

Practical Dairyman and Horticulturist. The dairy farmer must seek a higher price for his product for the following reasons: Higher cost of feeds, heavier freight charges and a more rigid dairy inspection. Now, what can be done about it? Perhaps the successful plan of the New England dairy farmers as told the writer by one of them may prove suggestive: "About thirty years ago the dairy business was in bad shape, but a number of us who kept only a few cows thought we could better ourselves if we formed a co-operative society to help each other, and the way in which we did it was along these lines: We formed a society in a district covering several square miles. The society issued shares of stock at a low price of $10, $20 or $30 a share, each member taking the number of shares he wished. Then we sold our milk in bulk and thus secured cheaper freight rates and higher prices for our milk. The wholesale dealers had to pay our price or go without our milk, which they couldn't afford to do, so they came to our terms. That helped us a little. Later we thought it would pay to turn some of the milk into butter and cheese, so we branched out and either built or purchased a creamery. The money invested would be anywhere from $1,000 to $3,000.

"The next big thing was to run our creameries economically, so we never employed more than one or two men. We soon learned business methods, and we worked to save expenses and to get the best prices. The milk of each member or patron of the creamery was tested and recorded, and they were paid according to the quality of the milk. This encouraged the production of the best grade of milk, for which we received top market prices. The problem of getting the milk to the creameries was easily solved, although our country is hilly. Nearby farmers brought their milk or cream daily to the smaller factories, while the large societies sent out milk gatherers, who went from farm to farm. Where farms were much scattered, local stations were named for the outlying farmers to bring the milk to where the gatherers got it and carted it to the factory. What have we gained? Business methods of farming, shorter hours of work, more neighborly interest in each other, improvement in our herds and farms, and a 4 to 6 per cent. return on

LIME AND ITS USES

The misunderstanding of the true relation of lime to soil fertility and crop production has often brought the practice of liming into undesired ill repute. The truth is that lime, instead of being only a soil stimulant (beneficial at first, but exhaustive), is quite the opposite. Lime is a soil constituent in two respects—as plant food and as a neutralizer of acids. Free acid is detrimental to the growth of beneficial bacteria; hence the importance of having lime enough in the soil to neutralize all acids as fast as they are formed by the decay of vegetable or mineral matter of sour soils. There are two classes of chemical compounds—acids and bases—which have the power of neutralizing the characteristic properties of each other. When a base and an acid combine, the former loses its power to combine with more acid. Lime, therefore, which is already combined with a strong acid, has no power to neutralize soil acidity. To this class belong land plaster or gypsum and rock phosphate, valuable in their way, but not as correctives of sour soil. The best compounds of lime for use in correcting soil acidity are ground limestone, marl and shells. Water slaked and quicklime are used, but these are caustic in their nature and act in a destructive way on organic matter in the soil. Liming has two principal effects on soil, both effective through the correction of soil acidity and promotion of bacterial activity. The first, the promotion of the growth of legumes, results in building up of the nitrogen and organic matter supply of the soil and is most desirable. This one effect is sufficient to justify the use of lime. In order to obtain these beneficial results, however, the legumes must be planted—namely, clovers, peas, beans, vetches and alfalfa. If these are neglected the principal object of liming—the improvement of soil fertility—is defeated. The second principal effect of lime is that of increasing the availability of the plant foods in the soil, especially the nitrogen, and of hastening the organic matter in the soil. This latter effect is destructive and exhaustive, but within proscribed limits defensible on the ground that plant food and organic matter in soil are to be used. If overdone to the extent of releasing plant food faster than plants can use it, then it becomes indigestible and results in lost fertility. The farmer should remember that these two opposing effects of liming work at the same time, and unless care be taken the bad will overcome the good. To be on the right side grow plenty of legumes.
