There is only one McCall in Massachusetts and he was chosen.
 Shekin galloped to New Haven, as Sheridan galloped to Winchester, to save the battle for old Yale.
 Incidentally, it deserves to be noted that the government at Washington still lives, though Bryan is not in it.

“Women meet with courtesy at the polls,” says a newspaper. About everything favorable they did meet with, let it be remarked.
 We doubt not that the “movie” men are down on the Mexican border taking pictures of the Agua Prieta battle. They are the most ubiquitous individuals we have nowadays.

Hard times for royalty—King George of England falling off his horse, the crown prince of Germany reported dead at the front and King Peter of Serbia being deliberately stripped of his territory. The “vine right of kings” is being somewhat violated.

Perhaps no Carnegie hero medals will be pinned on the Rev. Fr. Reardon of Harrisburg, Pa., by his presence of mind and courage in continuing the service of mass even though the edifice was burning over his head prevented a repetition of the Peabody holocaust. His was a splendid display of stout-heartedness.

There may be nothing in a name, but we note that a man named Lowell Kill of Gaysville accidentally shot himself in the left side while hunting. However, we rejoice with him that there was no commination of that which his name might signify. May he live to handle a shotgun in a more careful manner for a great many years to come.

Judging by the impossible addresses given by Americans who were assisted out of Europe at the outbreak of war, as revealed by the present fruitless search after delinquent debtors, the United States government was grossly imposed upon by a large proportion of those persons to whom the good Samaritan act was done. In the light of those revelations, there is not much wonder that the assisted people have failed to make good their promises to the United States government.

Though born in the United States, acquiring his wealth in the United States and getting honors in the United States, Herman Ridder could not forget the country of his parents. Germany occupied a prominent part of his mental workings, albeit he professed allegiance to the United States and would even fight for the United States against any nation should the need require. His was about the most signal case of divided patriotism that one could imagine. His “hyphen” was a strong bridge.

The Carranza and Villa forces chose a battle ground contiguous to United States territory so that they could have Uncle Sam as an umpire—perhaps. It is possible, however, that one or the other desired to get the United States embroiled in some international complication, knowing full well that the government at Washington would send a considerable number of troops to guard the boundary. Even though Mexico in part or in its entirety would be but a puny adversary for it, the United States may be dependent upon to keep out of actual entanglement.

PLENTY OF HYDRANTS.
 The efficiency of a fire department is greatly enhanced by the accessibility and multiplicity of hydrants, as was shown by the results of the fire in the Reynolds building in Barre Tuesday morning. The hydrants in that locality were so numerous and were so placed that the hose lines could be laid from several angles and the firemen were able to string the hose without confusion incident to composition of apparatus. There were three available hydrants on the street in front of the building and another directly in the rear, making many hose connections possible. And, by the way, this hydrant in the rear, together with the lines of hose run from Main street through an alley to the rear, formed the chief vantage point for attacking the flames in the Reynolds building, showing the value of the engineering feat of moving the bed of the river away from the rear of the buildings. Under conditions which prevailed a few years ago, before the course of the river was changed, it would have been impossible for the firemen to make a stand at that point because they could not have approached near enough to snake the streams of water effective from the outside bank of the old river bed. But under the new conditions they were able to shoot the apparatus as closely as desired and to carry the same into the burning itself. It was because of this that the fire was given its most effective denouement. So the wisdom of the scheme of changing the bed of the river was clearly demonstrated on that single occasion.

Hence, it is easily seen that the placing of hydrants in the rear has added

YALE HAS LOST CONFIDENCE.
But Hopes to Regain It Under Influence of Old Football Stars.
 New Haven, Conn., Nov. 3.—Captain Alexander D. Wilson of the Yale football team last night authorized the following statement relative to the change in the coaching system.
 “The football situation up to today has been that the team has lost confidence and lacks knowledge of elementary football. This has been due in a large part to the fact that experienced and older men who have played on former championship Yale teams have not been assisting in the coaching. They have now been called back both by Coach Hinkney and myself. They will take charge of the team. In effect the change is a return to the old Yale method of a board of coaches taking the responsibility for the team, instead of any single coach. Mr. Hinkney will be one of this board.”
 “Another Flagg ‘Take Off.’”
 In the November American Magazine James Montgomery Flagg, the famous wit and artist, writes an amusing piece which he calls “Mrs. Pearl Prunepiecher's Page in Every Lady's Magazine.” Following is an extract of what Mr. Flagg has to say regarding variety and a change:
 “When Jack or Harold come home tired from the works, they are often irritable. Why? Because they know exactly what you are going to serve them for dinner and exactly where! Very the monotonous, not only in your meals but in the places they are served. I think you will find it a welcome change to the dear boys to find, instead of the usual dinner table, that what is imagined for?”
 “Another way to spread a cutting board over the kitchen and set your table there. Your reward for those little thoughtful acts will be a bright smile and heightened color on Jack's or Harold's face, a shy squeam around the waist, and, maybe, after dinner he will take you to a lecture on Arctic Nights at the Natural History museum!”

JOY RIDE ENDS IN CINDER PIT
 Juror Wishart stated that the party bought liquor in North Barre immediately after their arrival in the city Tuesday noon and that they were in quest of more liquor when headed toward River street. He also quoted the officers as saying that Warren's jitney bumped into a post on Granite street and threw Mrs. Ferguson to the ground some moments before the outfit landed in the cinder pit.
 Warren took no exceptions to the grand juror's statement of the case beyond explaining that his car struck the pole on Granite street when someone “turned off a switch” in his machine.
 Magistrate Scott imposed a fine of $50 and costs of $7.80, which the respondent will probably pay, with an alternative sentence in the house of correction. Robinson later pleaded guilty to an intoxication charge and arranged to pay the minimum fine and costs of $8.20.

PEANUTS AND COTTON SEED.
Both Articles Remarkable for Food Value and Content.
 An editorial in the Dallas (Tex.) News says that cotton seed at $40 a ton reminds us of fortunes thrown away on the southern plantations before the Civil war, and even since the war. It comes to pass that a man can subsist without serious inconvenience upon the products of the once discarded seed. So he can on peanuts. The report is that agents are now on hand to buy the entire peanut crops of East Texas and Louisiana. It is claimed that the peanuts of those sections contain 20 per cent more oil than the nuts east of the Mississippi river. The demand for the goober crop has been marvelous, and efforts to explain this recent activity have been made by different persons in different ways.
 One authority claims that it has been ascertained in recent years that the peanut is the only product that can be converted into all the articles of a first-class menu. Soup meat, bread, olive oil, milk, tea, butter, hash and many high-sounding French articles are all made of the little Spanish peanut which grows all over Texas. Others contend that cotton seed can be converted into just as many different kinds of diet as the peanut can, and is even cheaper.
 The sudden increase in demand for these products may be explainable, at least in part, in another way. There are millions of soldiers to feed in Europe, and they are not half. There are millions of women and children to save from starvation. Even with seed at $40 a ton, cotton seed products are very cheap food, considering the nourishment they contain. So of peanuts—considering the food value of peanuts, they have always sold low except when retailed by the street corner parcher. Both these articles of food keep a long time without spoiling. The life of many a war victim will doubtless be saved by this year's cotton seed and peanut crops of Texas.

ARE YOUNG PEOPLE AS NICE TO LIVE WITH AS THEY USED TO BE?
 In the November Woman's Home Companion Kathleen Norris writes an interview with Margaret Deland, who is probably the foremost woman novelist in America. In the following extract taken from the interview Mrs. Deland comments on young people of to-day as compared with the young people of the past generations:
 “We were brought up by a rigid standard of duty when I was a girl,” smiled Mrs. Deland. “One was industrious and respectful because one was told to be. And I will not say, she added quickly, ‘that I think duty a higher ideal than truth—indeed in the last analysis it is apt to prove less so. But I will confess,—and here her eyes began to twinkle again,—I must confess that I think that our elders found our generation pleasanter to live with, than we—panting and breathless with an effort to keep up with the procession—find the young people of to-day. Still, she amended soberly, ‘I think in their straightforwardness they are a finer set than we were.’”

How to Remove Blood Stains.
 In the November Woman's Home Companion appears a page entitled “The Exchange” devoted to suggestions developed by housekeepers out of their practical experience. A Missouri woman sends in the following:
 “To remove a blood stain made by a pricked finger on any silk material, place about four inches of white sewing silk in the mouth and moisten. Then roll into a ball and rub the spot gently, and the stain will disappear as if by magic. Just try it and see.”

 We're true men of the hour—

PUT WAGON ON TRACK.
 Halloween Celebrators at Vergennes Called It a Joke.
 Rutland, Nov. 3.—Special Officer John W. Bristol has returned from Vergennes where he has been investigating the placing of a wagon on the tracks of the Rutland railroad Saturday night, supposedly as a Halloween joke, but the act is considered by the railroad officials as a serious offense and one which might have caused loss of life and much damage. No arrests have been made as yet. Officer Bristol, who is employed as a detective by the railroad company, found after an investigation that the wagon had been standing for a number of years in the rear of a barn near the point where it was placed on the rails. The obstruction was placed on the track about a mile north of the Vergennes station and it was struck by the passenger train leaving this city for the north at 8:45 o'clock.
 Luckily the engineer saw the obstruction on the track so when the crash came the train had slowed down.
 The country about the scene is thinly settled. It is believed to be the work of young boys rather than of tramps or any person who might be deliberately attempting to wreck the train.

BURLINGTON MAIL CARRIER ALLEGED TO HAVE USED CANCELLED STAMP.
 Burlington, Nov. 3.—Francis Coutermarsh, who has been employed at the local postoffice as mail carrier, having had a route in the north part of the city, has been dropped from the United States postal service, following an investigation made by the authorities of the charge brought against him that he had used a canceled stamp for private correspondence.
 The act was discovered by Postmaster J. E. Burke, who reported the matter to Frank Buckley, local inspector, and United States District Attorney V. A. Bullard, who, after looking into the matter, brought it to the attention of the authorities at Washington. Following an investigation made by them, Coutermarsh was dropped from the service by their order. Section 537 of the postal laws is the one violated by Coutermarsh and the penalty fixed for a person who is employed in the postal service is a fine of $500 or three years imprisonment, or both. For a person outside of the service the fine is $500 and one year imprisonment, or both.
