Bergdoll, Grover Cleveland, have you seen him? If so, notify the U. S. government.

Francisco Villa is still alive and as long as he remains so there is likely to be discord in Mexico.

A mild degree of interest centers in what the Vermont Republicans will do at Montpelier on Wednesday evening of this week. The convention is the can-opener which pries the lid off politics in Vermont.

Trappings of German royalty sold cheap on the auction block in New York last week. Somewhat the glamor about the Hohenzollerns has been dimmed, and their fittings out are reduced to mere metal and wood.

The arrival in Vermont of a few honest-to-goodness airplanes, not of the Fourth of July or carnival variety, seems to have stimulated interest to a considerable extent. Several cities and towns are waking up to the prospect of becoming landing centers for touring planes.

The action of the Vermont Marble company in encouraging its employees to invest a part of their earnings each week in government securities or bank deposits has resulted in the choice of the men to set aside each week enough to make the total savings for the year $31,292. The example ought to be followed in other industrial concerns in Vermont, for it is bound to be productive of habits of thrift to counteract the reckless spirit of the present day among many people.

DRAFT DODGER BERGDOLL

It looks to be a case of thorough investigation by a department of the United States government to determine in what way the wealthy young draft dodger of Philadelphia, Grover Cleveland Bergdoll by name, was permitted to have his freedom for three days for the ostensible purpose of going out to seek $150,000, that part of his fortune which he had buried shortly before his initial flight from the government, to escape military service. What official persons permitted the wool to be pulled over their eyes in such a manner is a proper matter for investigation, and after that is ascertained the next subject for inquiry would be to find out why two non-commissioned officers of the United States army allowed themselves to be inveigled into letting Bergdoll get out of their sight for a moment, knowing, as they must have known, about his initial flight and his defiance of the United States government, not to forget also the bold act of the young man's mother in trying to prevent officers from arresting her son after the officers had found the dodger concerned in a hall seat of his luxurious home in Philadelphia. In the meantime, while that investigation is going on there should be a resolute move on the part of the government agencies to ferret out the hiding place of the young man and to bring him in, $150,000 and all—providing that sum is anything but a pot of gold hung on a rainbow. Such a Captain Kidd adventure as going out to find $150,000 which had been buried in worth relating by the chief actor of the little drama. Bergdoll is the man to tell the story. He ought to be strongly persuaded to come forward and take the center of the stage. Every body look for Bergdoll.

PRESIDENT-ELECT PLUMLEY OF NORWICH UNIVERSITY.

Ever since his graduation from Norwich university in 1896, and presumably from a time considerably prior to that date, Charles A. Plumley has been an enthusiastic Norwich man, being foremost in the councils of the university, a trustee and a strong booster for the institution at Northfield. So it is not to be wondered at that Mr. Plumley received a decisive majority of the trustee vote in favor of election as president of the university. The university could scarcely find a more loyal man to be its administrative head, nor a man more thoroughly conversant with the needs of the institution. Mr. Plumley also possesses a considerable degree of tact, which is recognized as a good quality to be possessed by the president of a college or university. The benefit of Mr. Plumley's wide acquaintance throughout the state ought also to prove advantageous to Norwich. So these considerations, among others, serve to commend the action of the trustees. It is to be presumed that Mr. Plumley had already made known his willingness to accept the election; otherwise, the choice would not have been made. That proving to be the fact, a great many people throughout the state will welcome back to Vermont a man who lately had transferred his business affiliations to Akron, O., after serving the state as tax commissioner, although, as we understand it, he had retained his Vermont citizenship be-

Control

A famous driver of racing cars once said: "To safely control your motor, you must first learn to control yourself." How true this is! The man at the wheel must concentrate on the one object at hand; he must watch his car and he must keep his eye constantly on the road ahead. The man with a savings account is learning self-control; he is controlling his expenditures—he is watching the road ahead. Learn to concentrate your attention on the vital things of life, the things that make for real success, and let us help you! Throttle your expenses to the size of your savings account.

cause of his loyalty to the state. Many people regretted to have Mr. Plumley go away; so they will gladly welcome him back.

THE ASSASSINATION OF CARRANZA.

Although Venustiano Carranza, president of the republic of Mexico, was dictatorial, irascible and, apparently misguided, there is no proof that Mexico will be better off with him dead than it was when he was alive. Carranza ruled with a stern hand as far as his strength permitted him and he held the part of Mexico with Mexico City as its center in quite firm control for a period of approximately five years. But as Carranza came into power on a wave of unrest, so he, too, became a victim of unrest; and during the greater part of his regime he was compelled to make war on and resist revolutionary bands, including that of Villa, the bandit leader. Continually it was a fight for Carranza to hold his own against the dissatisfaction of the subjects of Mexico and although Carranza was chosen president of the republic in 1917 by the largest popular vote ever recorded in that country he sank into disrepute in the northern section of the country and then over practically the entire nation. What influenza Carranza's antagonistic attitude toward the United States may have had in undermining his support is not certain. It would be unwise, perhaps, to assert that that attitude had any strong bearing on the final chapter of his romantic career, inasmuch as the general feeling in Mexico is said to be somewhat hostile to the United States.

It goes without saying, however, that Carranza's brazen affront to the United States in the face of the fact that the government at Washington had seen fit to recognize in him the de facto government of Mexico went far toward making Carranza a man held in little esteem throughout the world. He was looked upon as a man of no great principles as regards international morality; he was considered as a man who would cast his lot wherever it seemed most feasible for him so to do. For a long time during the war it was suspected that he was in sympathy with Germany if not flagrantly planning with Germany to defeat the United States and the allies. The revelation of the Zimmerman note, while not explicitly showing that Carranza was plotting against the United States, gave rise to the belief that he was not above such activity and led the world as a whole to regard him as a national leader not to be trusted. Carranza was not friendly to the United States; his successor may not be any more so. In that respect the change will not tend to the benefit of the United States government, which has had a constant worry ever since Carranza has been in control, any more than the death of Carranza may prove to be advantageous to Mexico itself. Mexico deserves a chance to make good among the nations, but it will not be able to do so if another man of the Carranza state of mind gets control.

OVERALLS.

You cannot preach, you cannot teach. Nor go where duty calls. Unless you wear the latest fad. A pair of overalls.

A better cloth may feed the moth in fashion's scented stalls. But honest toil selects the web That makes the overalls.

In sand and dirt with clothes unsoiled. The baby laughs and crawls. And no one needs to see him roll In scolding overalls.

Blue jeans are tough but good enough. For pants, shorts or hats. And ladies smile to see your style Of latest overalls.

You should not run the denim show. Show off the faith that falls. But lift your chin and proudly grin In other overalls.

Wrong Tactics Against Emery.

Little question for this week: Is Emery bone dry when he speaks in Waterbury and damp when he talks to the Italians in Barre?—Northfield News.

The above is a fair sample of the way Babbitt papers are slamming Mr. Emery.

Did you like it?
 The salesman who runs down a firm he is in competition with is called, "a poor drummer." His firm, if it keeps him, is one to avoid doing business with, unless you want "to get stung."

If this kind of tactics does not pay in business, it will not pay in politics. Why is Mr. Babbitt a better man than Mr. Emery, for governor?

His papers do not say, but resort to personal innuendo like the above. Why?

The natural inference is they know Mr. Emery is the best man.

Mr. Emery has lived a clear, consistent life. He treats all alike, uses them as he would like to be used. Never a drinking man, he has always respected the rights and opinions of those who did not think as he did, on this and other questions.

He has never tried to get office by appealing to some popular idea. He has won friends, and some of them, because he has always been "on the square."

That is why in Orange county, in New York, where he is best known, everybody is for Emery.

They know him. He is one of the people; a plain farmer's boy; made his way in the world by his own efforts; knows what a people want; and as governor, will do his best to see that all the people "get a square deal."—Morrisville Messenger.

Why Not Druggists' Licenses?

The Randolph Herald and News recently called attention to conditions in Vermont under the federal prohibitory amendment in which it is impossible to secure liquor prescribed by a physician for a sick person. That liquor is not legally obtainable in Vermont for any purpose is a fact. But it is not because of the law. It is because Vermont druggists refuse to take out licenses under the law to furnish intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes.

The real situation is this: Many towns at the March meetings voted to grant the issuance of druggists' licenses, making it possible for many Vermont druggists to get a state license. The federal law provides for licensing druggists to sell liquor for medicinal purposes and specifically states under what restrictions. It is evident then Vermont druggists can furnish liquor for medicinal purposes if they are willing to comply with the requirements of law.

Further light on the rights of druggists is given in an opinion given to the Massachusetts board of registration in pharmacy by Attorney General Allen of that state, who holds that the word "concurrent" in the federal prohibition amendment permits the state and nation to pass such enforcement laws as each legislative authority may deem proper and enables each to enforce its own law. He closes his opinion with this statement:

"I am, therefore, of opinion that the so-called Volstead act does not nullify the provisions of our state law in regard to druggists' licenses. But a state license does not in any way relieve druggists from the necessity of procuring in addition a license under the federal law. A state license only authorizes the sale of liquor for medicinal purposes insofar as the law of this commonwealth is concerned. The druggist must in addition comply with the federal law. This point should be made absolutely clear to those to whom such licenses are issued."

This opinion seems as good for Vermont as for Massachusetts. In view of the fact that many towns have voted to grant druggists' licenses the question why do not Vermont druggists take out the necessary licenses and furnish liquors for medicinal purposes becomes pertinent.—Brattleboro Reformer.

Mrs. Libbey had the misfortune to break her hip about three months ago, and since that time has been in the Mary Hitchcock hospital at Hanover, till May 11, when she was taken home. For many years Mrs. Libbey lived in the home of her sister in Fairlee, where she has since that time been. The funeral was attended at that place on Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Mrs. Libbey was about 85 years of age and is survived by her sister-in-law and nephews and nieces.

The pre-Memorial exercises were held at the Methodist church on Sunday evening with a sermon by Rev. R. H. Moore and special music by the choir. The G. A. R. associate members and the W. R. All of the teams which used to be in service in gathering milk have been sold except some of the wagons and harnesses. Patrons now deliver their own dairy products, either themselves or in connection with their neighbors, who form clubs.

Mrs. Emma Holbrook, who has been in Bagley for the last three weeks, is now here for the present.

Several of the merchants have entered into an agreement to close their stores at 5 o'clock, beginning June 1.
