The packing industry has set the pace for industrial peace and the nation's come-back.

Germany seems to have a timelock on her uprising; at a given time the door unlocks and at a given time the door locks.

If Vermont could only set the hedge-hogs and rattlesnakes to fighting each other, the clash would save Vermont a pretty penny in bounties and in time spent by the legislators in biennial discussions.

The production of coal in the mines of the United States increased 18 per cent during the year 1920. A similar production in 1921, or possibly another increase, seems to be warranted by the conditions.

Japan is said to desire to see the United States disarm first before she (Japan) consents to such a program. That seems to be another case of "heads I win, tails you lose." Japanese diplomacy is hard to follow.

The new Sunday bill in Vermont does not say anything about the pay of caddies who chase the balls sent hurtling by the golfers on a Sunday. So there is doubt whether the caddies come under the designation of commercialized sport or not.

The so-called Americans who almost captured Grover C. Bergdoll, American draft evader, in a German town were given a stiff dose of punishment from a German court. The sentence was discounted at the start of the trial; in fact, nothing else was expected from the German court.

The new uprising in Germany is timed just right to have its supporting effect on the refusal of the German government to pay reparations demanded by the allies. Whether it is truthful to say that the uprising was fomented purposely to carry that effect remains as yet a matter of doubt.

The government of Holland is said to be considerably stirred up because the ex-kaiser, while enjoying the hospitality of that country, engaged in the writing and publishing of a book dealing with political matters. Holland may yet find that the guest it is entertaining is not altogether a very good asset for the country, despite the eagerness with which Holland welcomed the ex-kaiser when he fled from revolution-torn Germany.

A Massachusetts church of the Universalist denomination has inserted a want advertisement for a minister in a Boston newspaper. Why not? If you want "most anything else you insert a want advertisement and you generally get what you are after. The classified advertisement column is one of the greatest mediums for a get-together between buyer and seller of products or wares or services ever discovered. The Massachusetts church has started an innovation but is likely to have many imitators among those churches which seek quick action.

CARDINAL GIBBONS AN OUTSTANDING FIGURE

The late Cardinal Gibbons of the Roman Catholic church occupied a place of more than churchly importance in the United States. A representative of the Vatican in the United States, he did not confine his attentions to church work alone and, although barred by his position from active participation in the public life of the country, he was one of the outstanding figures of the time in American affairs. Cardinal Gibbons was intensely American in his thoughts and in his acts; his devotion to his native land was most pronounced. He had broad human sympathies and was a keen student of conditions in his country and in the world at large. Cardinal Gibbons' influence extended far beyond the borders of his own church and his counsel was sought in a wide range of activities. Cardinal Gibbons' counsel was almost invariably directed on the side of conservatism and he was not easily swayed by the uncertain innovations of life. He stood as a sort of rock in a sea of shifting sand. Those qualities made Cardinal Gibbons stand out as a foremost citizen of the United States.

THE REMEDY FOR VERMONT

W. S. Rossiter, statistician of the United States government, the man who some years ago prepared the Rossiter report on Vermont, has recently outlined in a talk in St. Albans some of the things which Vermont needs to do in order to check the downward trend of her population, while at the same time outlining some of the reasons why the young people leave Vermont. Mr. Rossiter's statements are very matter-of-fact and of such manifest reasonableness that they deserve to be given the most careful consideration. Briefly stated, the ways for bringing Vermont back into her own are: (1) appraisal of what each town can do; (2) study of transportation to assure of prompt market; (3) a clear plan for marketing; (4) use of Lake Champlain as a commercial advantage, not merely as a summer resort; (5) inculcating, in the public schools, a sense of moral obligation to Vermont; (6) actual work in providing opportunities in each town for the young and old; (7) system of individual advice to farmers; (8) take advantage of the big city markets at our very door; (9) put modern conveniences in our farm homes; (10) encourage household industries; (11) systematic effort to get Vermonters to return and to encourage choice foreign immigration; (12) talk up Vermont's conditions and then pass laws. It is an ambitious program but not too ambitious if Vermont is really in earnest about getting out of the slough into which she has fallen, or has been falling for a great many years. There are many of the features Mr. Rossiter mentions that at once commend themselves as very practicable. What the state needs to put these methods into effect is a competent and energetic leadership, together, of course, with an enthusiastic co-operation. It is a program on which all of us can and should unite.

"Take time enough to buy just what you want."

This week we want to get hand-glove with every man who wants to give his hands a treat.

Not Dependent on Sleeves

Compression in the Willys-Knight motor is not dependent on the fit of the sleeves. Compression is held by the usual piston rings and a similar but larger ring in the cylinder head. The latter, called the compression ring, presses against the surface of the inner sleeve in the same manner as the piston rings, sealing the combustion chamber.

Little by little, carbon packs around and back of this compression ring, causing it to press more snugly against the inner sleeve and seal compression even more perfectly.

Little Carbon Formed

Wherever combustion takes place, carbon is formed. In a poppet-valve motor this carbon deposits on the rough surfaces of the cylinder heads, on the heads of the pistons, and on the seats and heads of the valves. This deposit of carbon eats into the valves where they seat because the intense heat and pounding to which poppet valves are subjected makes metal sensitive to the carbon. This is known as "pitting." And "pitting" of valves is one of the most common troubles experienced with poppet-valve motors, for this eating away causes leaky compression.

No means has been discovered to prevent this pitting. Hence, it is necessary to take out the valves frequently and grind them down until a new, uniform surface is secured—an expensive and inconvenient operation. Carbon must also be frequently removed from the combustion chamber.

Carbon, which forms so rapidly in a poppet-valve motor as to seriously affect its operation, and therefore necessitates frequent cleaning, is barely noticeable in a Knight sleeve valve motor, even after two three years of service.

Complete Combustion

Little carbon is formed in a Willys-Knight motor because the large unobstructed valve openings permit exhaust of all "dead" gas after each explosion; the spherically-shaped combustion chamber has no "pockets" in which dead gas may linger, and the location of the spark plug in the center of the cylinder head directly above the piston, where the compressed gas is all confined, insures instantaneous and complete combustion of gas. Furthermore, as every part of the combustion chamber is machined to a smooth finish, there are no rough surfaces to which carbon can readily cling.
