A Bank With a Safety Valve

Practical service consists, first, of desire and, second, of ability. The desire to serve must be so vitalized and conditioned to throw out every right and left without regard to purpose or security, under the impression that permanent base or confidence can be gained in such a way.

True banking service is not charity, and banks are not charitable institutions.

The Peoples National Bank of Barrington has been growing gradually through the last two decades, growing in resources and growing in confidence. This is not magic concerned in this development, but simply the slow evolution of conservative financial policies consistently adapted to the needs of a rural community. The result of this trend is that there are now any in a rural community where our ability to serve is being reflected by a large volume of increased business.

Our experience gained through the many years of steady and uncomplaining application of correct financial policies makes us well fitted to-day, and while we are keenly interested in the "bank business" we have the further virtue of being known as "The Bank with the Safety Valve." If you believe in your bank, you will believe in its means of advancing your own interests and that of the community, we shall welcome your accord.
