Continued from 5th page: gods enter upon this work? But, now suppose man ascertains the nature of disease.

Does the physician know what ails us? Can he relieve us? These are the incisive questions we ask.

Observation is as absolutely necessary, if not more so, in the medical profession than in any other.

BLESSED WHOSE SOURCE

We now notice for a moment the blessings that accrue to mankind through the oft opposed, often unpaid, labors of those men who have devoted their lives to the practice of medicine.

A physician should have a heart that beats in sympathy with the sick and the afflicted.

But, over and above all, it seems to us, a strong faith in Him who assumed humanity, and has absolute power over life and death.

THE INTELLECTUAL AND MORAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE PHYSICIAN

When we take into consideration the complicated structure of man, the functions of the different organs, the many diseases with all their complications, modified by climate, constitution, age and other causes.

Observation is as absolutely necessary, if not more so, in the medical profession than in any other.
