

We hope every Whig will read this speech. It is strong in spirit and cogent in argument, and felicitous in style and illustration, and it is evident it told upon the House who gathered eagerly about the speaker.

Judge Collamer's speech, too, should be carefully read. He denounces Folk and his measures with a severity which is too well merited by that reckless usurper, and is highly creditable to the stability of principle, and the courage and boldness of the speaker.

CONNECTION. The Editor of the Boston Courier is entitled to an apology for representing him in the last Galaxy as having placed Judge McLean at the head of his columns as candidate for the Presidency.

But seriously—and everything in relation to this gallant, honorable and much-abused officer should be seriously said—if Gen. Scott has forgotten his allegiance to authority, which, however abused, is still authority, his office would be forgotten by a generous people.

Yesterday I counted some twenty Senators who were pledged to vote against the ratification. To-day I count 16—falling off of 4. They avoid quarrelling with the Administration, and especially those who look to the Presidency.
