POLITICAL.

REPLY OF CHARLES BROWN, OF PHILADELPHIA, TO JOHN M. CLAYTON, OF DELAWARE.

HENRY CLAY is now the whig candidate for the Presidency. His name has long been associated with that high office as an unsuccessful aspirant. Whenever placed fairly before the people, defeat has been his only reward, and mortification his principal consolation.

But as I said, the great mass of both parties hold not these doctrines, but that a tariff for revenue arranged with reference to all the interests of the country is the true theory, and the one they mostly all aim to have carried out in practice.

Of Mr Clayton and Mr Clayton in voting in 1833 to reduce it to nearly half that amount, as they did by their compromise act? The third charge is, that Mr Polk voted to reduce the duty on salt from 10 to 5 cents per 56 lbs.

sive. All that has been said against this bill and more, was said by the ultra friends of protection against the compromise act, which Mr Clayton says "Henry Clay with all the affection of a parent for the protective policy," interposed to prevent the "passage of the bill reported by the committee of ways and means in the House."
