THE AGE.

From the New York Sun. RESENTATION OF PLATE TO THE HON. C. P. VAN NESS, LATE COLLECTOR OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK. At Howard's Hotel, last evening (Aug. 22,) pursuant to public notice, a numerous meeting of the Officers of the Customs, with many private citizens, and several distinguished public characters, assembled to witness the presentation of a superb service of plate, of exquisite design and workmanship as a memorial of the respect of the officers of his department, for his 'official, political and personal character.'

Such a policy we deem essential to the dignity of the government and the political freedom of the party; else might the influence of official patronage be transmitted from one administration to another, to favor the aspiration and designs of some selected individual and the partisans, by secret bargain and compact; thus forestalling the free and unbiased choice of the people, and insidiously controlling it, before even a suspicion of the determining influence could be aroused. The passive obedience and non-resistance enforced by intolerant denunciation and proscription, which an internal despotism of party, thus erected, might temporarily secure, would not only invest the subordinate officers of the government with an imputation of political subservency and degradation, and defeat.

While, therefore, we fully adopt the maxim, as a just and practical general rule, that the civil offices of an administration should be occupied by its political friends to the exclusion of its political foes, and consider it a fair inference that in choosing an executive principle they also indirectly choose subordinate of the same political faith, we also hold it to a violation of an obvious equity, most disastrous in tendency, that any exclusive section of the ascendant party should be allowed to usurp and wield the patronage of those offices, as an instrument of dictation for prospective preference. As officers under an administration placed in power by the aid of our citizen suffrages and exertions, we insist upon exercising as free and untrammelled an independence in our politics as Democratic Republicans, as though we were private citizens merely and even if this indefeasible right be now, for the first time, thus boldly asserted, we shall never be induced to retrace the step or relinquish the claim.

Dear Sir:—On your retirement from the Collectorship of the Port of New York, an earnest desire was very generally evinced by the officers of your department, to avail themselves of that event as an appropriate occasion on which to offer you some expression of their respect for your official, political and personal character. The feeling being spontaneous the opportunity was regarded as unequivocally significant of its disinterestedness and sincerity.

Whilst, as officers under your authority we had been daily witnesses of your vigilance in supervision and pertinacity in disciplin—qualities at once invaluable to the public service and gratifying to all who partook of the sense of duty which inspired them—our respect for your official character was unalloyed by the imposition of any unreasonable or humiliating restraint upon our un-compromised privileges as citizens. As Democratic Republicans we had beheld with parental sentiments, your frank, direct, open-hearted and open-handed co-operation with the democracy of this City and State, in the late Presidential Election; and also, the sagacity and tact with which you had previously labored to affect that harmony and union between every sect and faction of the party which so happily resulted in unanimous and triumphant action. Nor were we less impressed with the broad justice and, therefore the wisdom of your policy, for preserving that unanimity for the future. Recognizing the claims of no particular clique or combination of the party, to any special monopoly of the officers under your jurisdiction, you apparently strove to uphold the sacred principles of freedom of opinion and choice, among all true Democrats, respecting the prominent measures and candidates of their party, by an elevated impartiality in your appointments to office. So far as your observation enabled us to judge no applicant was rejected and none preferred, on account of his having acted with the friends of either of the public men who were popularly named as desirable nominees of the Democratic party for the Presidency. We do not fulsomely ascribe to you an exemption from error, either in your appointments or in your removals or retentions; for to this no man occupying so difficult a position can hope to attain, and the conflicting umpirage of opinion which surrounds it. But we are proud of your intention, and a noble ambition, to establish the great principle of party freedom which we have mentioned, in opposition to sectarian denomination and proscription. In taking this exalted ground you faithfully represented, as we conceive, the true, indeed the avowed policy of the present administration, as declared in the Washington Union of the 11th inst.—'The administration will attempt to purchase no man by office; neither will attempt to conciliate the friends of any man, whether he or they be well or ill affected by casting to them 'official crumbs.' They will not willingly distrust any man or his friend, and secure in the invincibility of their principles, they apprehend no opposition from Democrats. If opposition come it will not come from the enemies of the administration alone, but from the enemies of Democracy.'

Several portions of this letter, especially those which referred to the main principle asserted, and to the firmness of Gov. Van Ness, in defending it, were loudly and fervently applauded.

Gentlemen.—I have listened to what it contained in the communication which has just been read to me, from a Committee on the part of the officers of the Customs, who have been pleased to present to me the beautiful articles now standing before us, as a testimonial of their respect and friendship. An act like this, emanating from those who have been associated with me in important public duties, but over whom I have no longer any official control and who, moreover, can expect no further official protection from me, must indeed, be viewed, when we consider how little there is, in the world, of true friendship, or of good faith, as the offspring of the most generous and most noble sentiments, in
