USE IVORY SOAP IN THE STABLE.

THE IVORY SOAP is most excellent for washing galled spots, scratches, etc., on horses, for it will cleanse without irritating, and the vegetable oils of which it is made are cooling and healing in effect.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The canvass just closed has been a school for the nation. Every one has learned more about the tariff than he knew before. This has been the burden of thousands of speeches before immense audiences, all over the north and west and in some parts of the South. Almost every one has had an opportunity to read tariff history, to learn of the nature and purpose of protective measures, and hereafter when there is legislation upon these matters the people will know better what it means.

It may be said of the campaign just closed that we have passed through it with as little low abuse as any campaign in our history. It may be the beginning of better days in respect to the character of our political contests. A little wit or satire may be enlivening but scurrility is degrading. It may not be out of place to tell the truth about men and to criticize public acts, but the practice of lying about men, of misrepresenting motives to destroy character and weaken influence should be condemned. We look more and more for the discussion of great national questions in a spirit of candor.

Cabinet speculations are now the order. Newspapers are busy in forming them. Next in importance to the selection of a president is the selection of counselors, and while the people attend to the former the president-elect must attend to the latter. There are men, however, whose names will readily suggest themselves as suitable for cabinet positions. Warner Miller, Gov. Alger, Allison of Iowa, are mentioned along with others. Frye of Maine will no doubt be the New England member though we should be pleased to see Vermont honored in this direction. The republican element of the South must be recognized, and Goff of West Virginia is pointed out as the coming man.

The republican victory in Delaware must be a great surprise to the people of that state. Delaware has been a kind of a pocket borough for a great many years, the Bayard and Salisbury families carrying it. There has really been no political freedom in that state. There has been a law of the state requiring of every man that he should register and pay a poll tax before being allowed to vote. Registration boards have been entirely under democratic control, and they have so managed affairs as to secure the registration of democrats and keep the names of republicans off the lists as much as possible. To do this the boards met at irregular times and places and while the democrats were all notified no word was sent to the republicans. Proxy payments were accepted from the democrats, while the republicans were required to pay in person, and besides all sorts of tricks to keep the state within their control, they have in hundreds of instances refused republicans who were anxious to pay their tax and register. A little oligarchy has been made of the state, and the methods referred to, are in line with the Southern spirit of political intolerance. The change is a marked one and may be regarded as an emancipation from the shadow of the old slave system. This is quite a break in the "solid South."

Supt. Dartt takes a rather gloomy view of the condition of our schools. Our schools are not as good as they ought to be, but we do not believe they are as bad as it is the fashion to represent them. We have a great many schools in poor districts, where it seems necessary to employ cheap teachers, but we have many excellent schools, many excellent teachers, doing a good work in all parts of the state. We are graduating excellent scholars from our graded schools, fitting a goodly number of young men and women for higher institutions of learning and sending them thither, some in our own state and others without. We are not relaxing into such a state of ignorance as will soon make Vermont missionary ground. But we ought to devise some method of remedying existing defects and render our schools more efficient, which we think can be done, even at the present cost of maintaining them.

We have received a copy of the report of the commissioners upon the Normal Schools. In this report the commissioners say they have attended to the duties imposed upon them, visited the Normal Schools, observed their daily work and familiarized themselves with former reports of their condition and work, etc. They give tables, showing the number of graduates from each school and the amount of money received by them, so far as they were able to ascertain. It is not necessary to follow the report through, suffice it to say, the tenor of it is opposed to the present arrangement and in favor of one school situated so as to accommodate all portions of the state. The fact is, the report is an argument against three schools and in favor of one. We understand that the report does not meet with favor in the legislature, and that its recommendations will probably not be adopted. The report of the school commission will not, as things now appear, meet with much favor, though it is possible some features of the bill will be incorporated into existing laws.

THE ELECTIONS.

The election on Tuesday, Nov. 6th, passed off very quietly in Vermont, the republican majority varying but little from the September election. Of course Harrison and Morton were elected. All the New England states except Connecticut gave their votes for the Harrison electors. Conn. is very close, and at this writing there is some uncertainty about the result, with chances in favor of the democrats. Outside of N. England the interest was more intense, because of some states that stood in the doubtful list. The Republicans carried all of the Northern and Pacific States except New Jersey. They made gains in West Virginia and Delaware. In the latter state they have elected a republican legislature which will choose a senator in place of Saulsbury. This is a new state of affairs for that little state and a slight break into the solid South. A crack was also made into the other side of the old confederacy, a republican representative having been chosen from Louisiana. Indiana and New York were the two states in which the greatest interest centered, for it was generally conceded that the result in those two states would determine the general result. Indiana, the home of Harrison gives him a plurality of over 2,000, and New York, on the national ticket, goes republican by about 10,000 majority, though the democrats elected Hill, their candidate for governor. It is said by some that Hill gave us Harrison, but the fact is, that whatever he may have done to defeat Cleveland in order to make sure his own election, Harrison would have been elected. Later returns show that West Virginia, of which little account was made by the republicans in their general calculations has cast its vote for Harrison. The general fact is, that Harrison and Morton are elected by such decisive majorities as to leave no room for question. If the democrats say there was fraud and corruption in New York, we reply by saying that the republicans would have won without New York or David Hill to help. The democrats of New York do not feel highly elated with the result in their own state, for they have lost Cleveland in winning Hill. The democrats made up the issue for this campaign, free trade against protection and they have lost in the fight. The republican gains almost everywhere in the republican states and in some that have almost always been democratic, show that the prevailing sentiment of the people of this country is in favor of protection to home industries. But the republicans have not only gained the presidency, they have secured a majority in the National House of Representatives. This, with one or two more senators, of which they are reasonably sure, places the administration of the government, once more, in good republican working order. The result of the election shows some things, that we may specify and set in order:

First, whether free trade, be right or wrong as a matter of national policy, the sentiment of the people of this country is opposed to it, as we have already intimated. It has been a long time since the matter was brought so distinctly into our national politics as in the canvass just closed. Heretofore for a long period people have talked about it, at various times listened to arguments for and against, now they have given a decided expression to their opinions on the subject. This generation, like the former, believes in protecting home industries.

Second, the democratic party has failed to satisfy the people of the country in the character of its administration. It took possession of the government with the cry of reform. It did not take long to satisfy the people that this word meant nothing in a democratic dictionary. There have been no reforms inaugurated. It has been found impossible for the party to reform anything. There are no elements of reform in it. Reform must begin at home and whenever a political reformation comes over a democrat he goes out of the party. The democratic experiment of the last four years is as much as the people of this country dare risk and they have placed the administration of the government back into the hands of the only party that for the last thirty years has shown itself capable of governing in such a manner as to give confidence to the people and dignity and character to it in the eyes of other nations.

Third, with an administration in the hands of the republicans, we may confidently look for a revival of industries that have been partially paralyzed by the fear of free trade. We may look for a steady national policy for a term of years at least, for now justice will be done to certain territories that have been seeking admission to the Union, but which have been kept out because they were republican. It may be the South will discover that its prosperity can be better promoted by a party that asks for justice for all men.

The country is to be congratulated upon the result and we shall certainly look forward to greater national prosperity.

NORTH BARTLAND.

Katie Burke fell and fractured the bone of one arm last Saturday.

The school in the Gilson district closed last Friday. Miss Persis Gilson was the teacher.

The Union Labor flag shed the names of its candidates last Wednesday. The high wind may have helped the matter, but the old banner was doubtless discouraged at the result of the election.

Edward C. Carrigan, an old and successful teacher in this place, died of apoplexy last week Wednesday while enroute for Colorado Springs. He had been in Gen. Butler's law office for several years and was a member of the Boston school committee. He graduated from Dartmouth in 1877.

Napoleon Luce, formerly known as "G" died at the residence of John Webster last Wednesday.
