

AT THE TOP.

It is a laudable ambition to reach the top of the ladder of success. But many a man who reaches the top of the ladder finds his position a torment instead of a triumph. He has sacrificed his health to success. A man can succeed and be strong by the head. Nature's warnings. When there is indigestion, loss of appetite, ringing in the ears, dizziness, spots before the eyes or palpitation of the heart; any or all of these symptoms point to weakness and loss of nutrition. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the medicine to turn to.

$3,000 PROFIT will be paid by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., if they cannot show the original signature of the individual who is testifying to the value of the medicine to turn to. For about two years I suffered from a very obstinate case of dyspepsia, writes R. E. Second, Esq., of 15 Eastern Ave., Toronto, Ontario. "I tried a great number of remedies without success. I finally lost faith in them all. I was so far gone that I could not get a long time without any solid food in my stomach; felt melancholy and depressed. Could not sleep nor follow my occupation. Some four months ago a friend recommended your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' After a week's treatment I had derived so much benefit that I continued the medicine. I have taken three bottles and am convinced it has in my case accomplished a permanent cure. I can conscientiously recommend it to the thousands of dyspeptics throughout the land."

There is no further cause for worry. We are told that Governor McCullough paid all the expenses of himself and staff to the dedicatory exercises at St. Louis.

Mary Baker Eddy, called reverend by courtesy, founder of the sect known as Christian Scientists, is preparing to build one of the handiest church structures in New Hampshire in Concord, the city of her residence. She has contributed $120,000 for the purpose.

Union beer is the cry at Rutland. All the saloon-keepers say they will have no other and have invited representatives of the Trade and Labor Council to examine their stocks at any time. The bartenders are going to have a union as soon as the first rush is over and they can get time to organize.

The Ludlow Tribune makes a good point. It says: "At last there is a prospect of some kind of a new depot at Bellows Falls. The townspeople want a new location, and the railroads want permission to use the old site and the old walls. The townspeople, if they have reason on their side, better not accept any compromise. The new depot, once built, will have to stay where it is put for a long, long time."

A vigorous war is being made in certain quarters against pictorial supplements to Sunday newspapers, aiming to furnish entertainment for the young. It is argued that these supplements are doing an immense amount of wrong in continually suggesting to the youthful mind that it is a shrewd and laudable thing to play tricks on his elders and practice all kinds of devilry. Rudeness, coarseness, bad manners, dishonesty and silliness are a few of the things taught by these gaudy attempts at entertainment. The great metropolitan Sunday papers ought to be able to provide their young readers with more wholesome and serviceable reading.

The Northfield News thinks that the United States government ought to pay for what advertising it wants and not send newspaper publishers requests for gratuitous boomer. This sounds like business and the motion ought to prevail but will not until the legislature has been educated a little more. But why not go a little further. Why should the general government pay for its advertising. Publishers are continually receiving requests to publish certain matters providing it can be done without cost to this or that department. The News continues: "This unwarranted burden on the publishers of the state, who probably receive less compensation for their exacting work and capital invested than almost any other class of business or professional men, will continue to increase until they take the matter up either as an association or individuals and put a stop to it. If any apology is needed to the reader for talking shop in the editorial columns it may be said that the matter is presented in the interests of better newspapers which must be the inevitable result of fair compensation for state advertising."

Tough for Weary Willies.

Our neighbor up the line, The Vermont Union Signal, the state organ of organized labor, indulges in a Utopian dream. It thinks the time is coming when every man can secure work who desires it or who is compelled to work by necessity. It takes a good deal of necessity to compel some men to work. Farmers all over Vermont, and the same is probably true of other states, are crying long and loud for help, but there are none to assist, notwithstanding thousands of shiftless specimens are tramping about the country and asking for charity on the ground that they cannot secure work. If told where work can be secured they make tracks in the opposite direction. If organized labor could force these fellows to work as opportunity presents it would do society a lasting favor, but cause weeping and gnashing among the weary brethren. The Signal says:

The union labor movement is responsible for the prosperity of the country. There is not a man in the country who can logically contradict it. The lessening of the hours for a day's work has taken the formerly idle men from the ranks of the unemployed. It has divided the work to be done among all those who have no means of subsistence accumulated, and that has given better wages than formerly and the better wages have increased consumption and given a greater volume to commerce. The fewer hours for a day's work for each person minimizes the desire of the wage earners to engage in commercial or manufacturing lines for themselves. This leaves a more profitable of good results for those engaged in traffic and thus the better conditions prevail. The time will come when the industrial conditions will be so simplified as to leave no man without work when he desires to work or when necessity compels.

Bishop Spaulding on Labor.

Bishop Spaulding, one of the commissioners to investigate the anthracite coal strike has said some sensible things regarding labor and labor unions. For example: "The root of our industrial trouble is the fierce competitive system under which we live, and which results from over capitalization and over-production. Some of our greatest industries are capitalized at four or five times their real value, and every possible device is resorted to in order to pay dividends on watered stock. The outcome of this will be, sooner or later, disaster. "We need not so much new measures, but a new heart. In our labor difficulties the moralization of both employers and employees is an indispensable condition in the bringing about of a better state of things. "And since the employers are fewer in number and presumably more intelligent than are the laborers, the chief effort should be to give them new minds and new hearts, that they may understand that they are trustees not less of public interests than of private interests and that the rights of workers, to say the least, are as sacred as fire the rights of owners."

"Just as the union is recognized, just to that extent it is forced into responsibilities which it could not shirk if it would. The time may come when it will be advisable to incorporate unions, but it is not yet here; it is enough that union labor is recognizing that the union which repudiates its contracts literally kills itself. "Today the trades union needs to be counseled to a more conservative policy with reference to men and things. It needs to modify its attitude toward the non-union man; to temper its aversions to new inventions; to curb its disposition to limit output, to discourage the most efficient workers, and to resort to the sympathetic strike and the criminal boycott. "American laborers are not socialists, much less are they anarchists; they are for the most part religious, law-abiding men, and unionism as it exists today in the United States is a beneficent and conservative force, and where the unions are strongest their influence is most helpful. "The church should do what it is possible for it to do to improve the civil and economic condition of the people, but it will work more effectively by eliminating and purifying its own members, by inspiring them with an eager desire to be of help; to labor disinterestedly to lessen the sin and sorrow and suffering of men."

Letter to L. T. Lovell.

BELLOWS FALLS.

Dear Sir:—Milk, so much a quart-part water. Is it milk? How much satisfaction will it get you? How much nourishment? How many customers will it win? Mixed paint is the same as watered milk. It seems to be cheap, but it isn't. Devote lead and zinc is rich milk's creamy milk; seems to be costly, but isn't. Covers more square feet to the gallon; covers it better; makes labor go further; lasts more years than any mixed paint; lasts more years than lead and oil.

The cheapest paint in the world, made by the oldest concern in America—149 years old. Mr. J. J. Hall, Sheffield, Pa., writes: "I had always used 40 gallons of lead and oil for my house; this summer I bought 40 gallons of Devco Lead and Zinc for the same house and had 100 gallons left. Yours truly, F. W. Devco & Co., New York. P. S. Howard Hardware company sell our paint."

The Checks Came Back.

The following story from the Brattleboro Phoenix of May 8 will be of interest to people in this place.

Indorsing cashiers' drafts and receiving money on them made trouble last Friday for Rev. K. S. Sidelinger of St. Johnsbury, who has been in Brattleboro several weeks working up the membership of the Modern Woodmen of America. On Friday, April 24, Mrs. A. J. Tewksbury of Brattleboro, who is an agent and canvasser for shoes, was in possession of two drafts, one for $116.25 and one for $68. One was issued by the Black River bank of Proctorsville on the National Exchange bank of Boston and the other was issued by the Orange National bank on the State National bank of Boston.

Desiring to get the drafts cashed Mrs. Tewksbury indorsed her name on the back of each draft, put them in her bank book and started with them for the Vermont National bank. She handed her bank book to John C. H. Thompson, who asked what she wanted done with it. She said she wanted the drafts cashed and was told that there were no drafts in the book. Thinking that she might have lost them or left them at home Mrs. Tewksbury returned her steps home, but could not find the drafts. Then she sent word to Boston to have payment on the drafts stopped.

A few days later Mrs. Tewksbury received notice from Boston that one of the drafts had arrived, that it had been cashed in St. Johnsbury and had been sent to her by C. K. Green, then by K. S. Sidelinger, on last Thursday night Mrs. Tewksbury drove to Newfane after State's Attorney Schwenk, who was attending county court. Mr. Schwenk returned with her to Brattleboro, issued a warrant for Sidelinger's arrest and gave the chief-of-police hall, who arrested Sidelinger, a check for the amount due him on the drafts stopped.

Sidelinger remained in custody of an officer until morning when he was taken to State's Attorney Schwenk's office. He said that he was at the brewery one evening, that a man there who was a stranger to him wanted to play pool with him, that he invited the man to his room in the American House and that when they finished playing the man was indebted to him. He said the man had no money, but that he drew from his pocket a draft which was indorsed the same as the first one and that he complied with the man's wish to cash it. He said he was in St. Albans. He said he was innocent of any intentional wrong doing and supposed the drafts came into Green's possession in a rightful way. He said the O. H. Green who has been assisting him in his work in Brattleboro was not the man who indorsed the drafts.

Sidelinger furnished bail for the amount of the drafts, E. M. Angier and H. B. Haus becoming surety. A hearing in the case was held Monday before Justice F. D. E. Stowe. A hearing Monday Mr. Sidelinger denied that he was guilty of any intentional wrong, but was convinced that he was liable for the amount of the drafts. He refused a portion of the money and the hearing was continued until May 27 to enable him to pay the remainder.

Sidelinger organized a branch of Modern Woodmen in Bellows Falls, remaining here several weeks. Mrs. A. J. Tewksbury is agent for the Furber shoe and comes to Bellows Falls often.

George A. Clark.

The following extract from a notice of the funeral of George A. Clark at Holyoke, Mass., is taken from the Springfield Republican of Wednesday, May 6. Mr. Clark was a former resident of Bellows Falls, a son of A. S. Clark of the firm of Clark & Chapman, owners of the machine shop here owned later by Osgood & Barker.

The funeral of George A. Clark, for nearly 27 years treasurer of the Newton Paper Company, and for 10 years pastor in the Second Congregational church, was held yesterday afternoon at the house, 245 Beech street, Holyoke. The funeral was largely attended, many of Holyoke's best-known business men and manufacturers being present and the burial tributes being numerous and costly. A mixed quartet sang several selections and the services were conducted jointly by Rev. J. H. Lockwood of Westfield and Rev. Dr. E. A. Reed of Holyoke. Dr. Reed's remarks were delivered with deep feeling.

George A. Clark was born in Hubbardston, October 11, 1847. His family removed from there to Bellows Falls when he was two years old, where he attended the public schools, and later took a course of study at Kimball Union academy at Meriden, N. H. He went to Holyoke when 18 years of age, and entered the Newton Paper Company, the business, under the advice of James H. Newton, and after learning it was for a short time superintendent. The Newton paper company was organized in 1870, and he was connected with it from the start, being secretary for a short time, and being appointed treasurer, a position which he had held ever since. He also had for a while the management of the Clark Machine company of Turner's Falls, and was highly successful in his business administration. His connection with the Home and the People's savings banks has already been told, as well as his family relations. He was married to Miss Ellen Dibble of Westfield in 1884, by whom he had five children, John G., Ruth, Rachel, Marion and George A. Mrs. Clark died in 1891, and for his second wife he married, in 1893, Miss Flora Wilson, a kindergarten teacher in Hubbardston. Three children resulted from this second union, Robert W., Paul W., and Fred Hall, all living. Two sisters, Mrs. William Mann of Boston and Elizabeth of Northampton, and one brother, Dr. J. S. Clark of Westfield, are also left. The burial was in the Forestside cemetery.

Powers' Testimonials.

F. Akirk Iller in Physical Culture, which, by the way, is a magazine, takes the "patent medicine" career of Hon. H. Henry Powers for a subject and treats it in a humorous and entertaining sort of way. According to Iller, the ex-congressman has "dosed" himself almost since he peeped over the sides of the cradle. Iller says: "The early part of his career in the legal profession was in keeping with the usual hard struggle of the young lawyer, and it became painfully evident to him that he would have to spring something on litigants in order to secure a clientele. He accordingly took three bottles of 'Paine's celery compound,' and repeated the oft-told tale 'How I was cured.'"

Iller says that this testimonial elected him prosecuting attorney, state representative, state senator and judge of the supreme court.

The judge's next "dose" of patent medicine was when he was cured by Greene's Nervura.

Iller says that the Nervura testimonial landed the judge in the United States congress.

Soon after he became acquainted with the Washington bunch he felt the need of something new in the medicine line and he wrote a glowing account of what Peruna had done for him.

This testimonial, according to Iller, gave the congressman the leadership of the Peruna party, which was very powerful before he arrived at the national capital.

Iller continues: "Under his (Powers) leadership the Peruna party made wonderful strides forward but, strange as it may seem, the more the congressman professed being cured, the more feeble they grew, and stimulated by the example of Mr. Powers, there are now over 50 active members in the party taking the cure."

"Powers tried to make Peruna the national tonic," asserts Iller. The president was opposed to this movement, as he had accepted Moxie Nerve Food for a tonic and believed his judgment was better than that of the man from Vermont.

Iller concludes his autobiography of the ex-judge and ex-congressman by saying: "Powers' term expired in 1901, and his constituents failed to return him to congress. They claimed that a man may have retires all the time, that he may get rid of all the pains some of the time, but they doubted Powers when he got cured of all his pains all the time."

If Iller is correct the Powers patent medicine testimonials were his undoing as a national politician.

His retirement from congress, however, is attributed to another cause by the majority of Vermonters.—Essex Record.

Made Drunken Assault.

Frank A. Larrow, a salesman for a wholesale liquor house and formerly proprietor of a hotel in Guilford, was before the district court in Greenfield, Mass., Saturday afternoon on the charge of assaulting his wife, Angelina Larrow, at Guilford Friday night and attempting to murder her.

Larrow was arrested in Greenfield Saturday morning by Patrolman Wilcox on a complaint telephoned to him from Brattleboro by Chief of Police Hall. The only question which the local court could pass upon was whether Larrow should be held for extradition papers from Governor McCullough of Vermont. Larrow's counsel moved to quash the complaint issued by the local court on the ground that it did not set forth that there was an indictment or complaint against Larrow issued in another state. This was overruled by Judge Lyman and bail fixed at $2000. In default, Larrow went to jail. Larrow finally consented to go to Brattleboro without requisition papers and did so.

The Vermont authorities gave this version of the alleged assault for which Larrow is wanted: Larrow and his wife separated about May 1 and the wife is an applicant for a limited divorce. She asked for alimony of $15 a week. Because of alleged threats made by Larrow, Judge Tyler of Brattleboro had issued an order restraining Larrow from interfering with the personal liberty of the wife and an arrangement by counsel had been made whereby alimony of $35 a month was to be given her.

Larrow wanted a full divorce and after drinking, drove out to Algiers Friday night and, according to the officers, brutally assaulted his wife because she would not consent to a full divorce. Neighbors took a hand, the woman escaped and Larrow secured an axe and threatened to make things lively for those who had taken the part of his wife. Taking his eight-year-old son Larrow then drove to Greenfield and his arrest followed.

Papers were issued in Brattleboro by State's Attorney Schwenk, charging assault with intent to kill. The boy was taken back to his mother at Brattleboro during the day.

A Palatial Saloon.

For harmony of color, light and furnishing with the general arrangements the business place of John H. Dugan of Center street in Rutland will probably surpass the attempt of any Vermont liquor dealer. In conformity to the statutes the store is so arranged as to offer a full view of the interior from the street and attracts the attention of every passing pedestrian. To the right of the entrance are combination show cases, and on either side are swell front wall cabinets. Ten oil paintings arrest the eye in pleasing effect with steel panels representing spring and autumn. The statues of Bacchus and Bacchanti, the god and goddess of wine, and the figure of a Turkish maiden are resplendent with small incandescent lamps. Vases of roses and carnations alternate with the paintings, two of the receptacles for the flowers being imported work of old potters, while here and there are rare pieces of bric-a-brac. The cases used for the display of goods are of oak and black ash and were made to order for Mr. Dugan by the Brunswick Barke company of New York. The ceiling is of steel and the floor tiled with inlaid linoleum, and the lighting is by clusters of electric lamps covered by jackets of cut glass. Mr. Dugan was remembered by several friends in and out of the city on the occasion of his opening recently by fine floral pieces.—Vermont Union Signal.
