WORRY—THE DISEASE OF THE AGE

We have been reading a most interesting book with this title, written by Dr. C. W. Saleeby.

The title itself was interesting. IS worry the disease of the age? We felt that we ourselves had not escaped it, and we decided to see what Dr. Saleeby had to say.

We are glad we read the book. It is a good book, and a helpful book. It would help you.

* * * * * * *

It IS true that the wise men of all ages have been the captains of their souls. They rose above the things that would hinder them. We know that the cause of worry is life itself. We also see that worry increases with civilization, because men's lives become more complex as their vision broadens. Every one of us looks back on a complex past, and anticipates a very involved future.

Worry comes from our self-consciousness—that is, our consciousness of our own identity. We realize that WE are the center of our own universe, and that WE are concerned with ALL that universe, of mind, of body and of soul.

That is why worry plays such a big part in our lives. It affects our health and our morals, our domestic happiness and our business, our relationships with others, our religion, and our entire state of mind and body. We are all restless. That is the attitude of the whole world. Nearly every other week somebody starts a new religion, thinking to find a comfort there. We don't believe today as much as our forefathers did that underneath are the everlasting arms. Worry leads us to turn to new things, to new creeds, as well as to dissipation, to drugs; to the attitude of the Stoics, who said, "Never concern yourself about anything," or even to that of the Epicureans, who went still further, and said, "Eat, drink, for tomorrow we die."

* * * * * * *

Still, if there were no worry in the world, we would all be like so many animals. The cow never worries, because she is only a cow. We MUST concern ourselves about life and death. No good thing has ever come to humanity from humanity that did not have its birth in the discontent and worry of some struggling soul. If we should abandon every form of worry, we might as well be sticks and stones.

* * * * * * *

All this is in Dr. Saleeby's book. He points out how there is a HEALTHY worry and an UNHEALTHY worry, and that the UNHEALTHY is the kind we must get rid of.

And the conclusion he reaches is just about this—that the only cure is to search down in our souls and find some living truth that permits us to say "I BELIEVE," and then HOLD TO IT with all the faith we possess, so that by means of that faith we may cure ourselves of this world-wide disease, and live and die with a HEALTHY BODY and HEALTHY MIND.

And the Jamestown exposition never will be complete unless it has a row in the board of women managers.

However, it can be stated that Henry Watterson's dark horse is not Booker T. Washington.

PETTIE PRIMROSE IN GEEGAWKLAND

A TRIP IN THE "SEEING GRIMCRACKVILLE" AUTOMOBILE

IV.

So glad were the wooden villagers to have Pettie among them that they hastened to show her the sights of the town. They loaded her into a "Seeing-Gimcrackville" automobile, Peter at the steering wheel and Rosalie speaking through a megaphone to tell what the different sights were.

"This," shouted Rosalie, "is the largest town in Geegawkland the Gleeful."

"Oh, and you are all Geegawks?" said Pettie.

"Not at all. We are just Gimcracks," said Rosalie. "This town is Gimcrackville."

"Then what IS a Geegawk?" Pettie asked.

"Sh-h-h-h!" said Peter. "Sh-h-h-h!"

Pettie was whirled along through the wooden village and was shown Rosalie's house, and Peter's house, and Pansy's house, and Grunty's house, and the no-house-at-all which belonged to Caw, the wooden crow; and the church, and the funny house with a tower on it, which looked like a very important house, but which was not a Carnegie library, because there were no toys named Carnegie.

"There is a certain house here which is the Grand Geegawk's house," said Rosalie through the megaphone.

Then something happened.

Millers in the Puget sound district yesterday agreed to raise the price of flour 25 cents per barrel for home consumption and 15 cents per barrel on the export output. The price of flour now is $3.70 per barrel. The increase became effective today.
