PARIS Government is Ready and Would "Use Force" If German Warsaw War Follows

LONDON, July 12—President Harding's message looking to the ending of the world's war at a time when France was still worried with the almost personal grievances between France and Great Britain, was declared to be of considerable significance.

Speaking on the subject of the American Peace, the head of the British government said: "I need not say that we welcomed with the utmost enthusiasm both Harding's wise and conciliatory words."

The house cheered this statement, and the president added: "I am sure the people of this country will support the president in every way possible."
