Dr. Hays in reply disclaimed any personal allusion in the part of his speech to which Mr. Royce took exceptions. Mr. Royce, without apparently hearing the Doctor's disclaimer, appealed to the audience as to whether his remarks had deserved such an intemperate attack. Dr. Hays' attention to the offensive remark.

As each speaker ended applause broke out from their respective friends. When quiet was obtained and persons invited to sign the pledge, no one, with possibly an exception of two, responded. That temperance meeting will be remembered as one altogether lively.

Mr. Royce seems to have changed his position somewhat since he took part in the great temperance revival in this city in 1874. He used to appear on the platform, and exhort people to sign the pledge. Perhaps he has seen reason since then to change his views as to the proper methods to be employed. He certainly was however, quite unfortunate in his way of illustrating his present position, and no wonder Dr. Hays pitched in and exposed its untenability.

DIED. ZEVELY.—On Wednesday night, April 11, 1877, at his late residence, J. H. Hays, aged 62 years 2 months and 21 days.
