The Late Presbyterian General Assembly.

It is the verdict of some of the critics of the newspaper press that the time of the Assembly at Chicago, just adjourned, was too much occupied with trivial affairs. We condense one of these reviews as follows: The failure to resume fraternal relations with the Southern wing was due, principally, to the arrogance of the latter, and the defeat will probably be accepted for some years to come. The question of reducing the unwieldy dimensions of the Assembly was presented to the Presbyteries in the shape of two "overtures" for them to vote upon; one providing for representation by Synods only; one for direct representation from Presbyteries, but on a reduced basis as to numbers. Communion wine was the subject of a grave discussion, and several ministers argued for the "non-alcoholic fruit of the vine" - whatever that may be - but the control of the matter was finally left to the sessions, with the recommendation that they get the purest wine obtainable. There were drummers with samples of ecclesiastical wine in the lobbies of the Assembly. The Assembly adopted a series of resolutions recommending total abstinence from intoxicating liquors as a beverage. The Sabatarian action concerning newspaper publishing has been noted, and the other case of discipline, that of Mr. McCune of Cincinnati, was the subject of much talk, but no action. The Assembly was full of "smart" fellows, who talked by the hour to no purpose. Prof. Swing's Alliance expressed this pertinent judgment on the affair: "Not many assemblies will convene as this one has convened, with no great matter of business on hand. In a year or two some young man will arise and move that 'this assembly do here and now lay upon the shelf certain old formulas called the Confession of Faith.' The men who will move and second such a motion are not only now living, but they are almost writing their speeches. In that day there will be no policemen needed to keep the clergy from chatting with the ladies and with each other in the back seats, for the business of the hour will make all seek front seats, and will create its own deep attention."

Cotton Goods.

The export of cotton goods for the nine months ending March 31 was 17,823,000 yards of colored and 53,262,000 of uncolored, against 6,404,000 and 41,178,000 respectively last year; total about 71,000,000 yards against 47,500,000. This is an increase of about 50 per cent. We fear, however, that there is very little probability of American makers getting a "large share of the European and most of the South American trade." We shall do well if we can work off our present surplus and gradually enlarge our foreign market. The export of cotton goods from England during the four months ending with April was 1,257,000,000 yards, and increase over the export of 1876 and 1875. During the same four months, England exported to the United States 24,276,000 yards of cotton goods. We give these figures to show the preponderance of the idea that our cotton manufacture has in any appreciable degree crippled that of England, or that any large proportion of the European consumption is ready to drop into our hands. We have left out of account entirely the great continental manufactures. Probably we can wrest a share of the South American, African and Asiatic trade from our foreign competitors. While the English export of cotton goods to the United States has fallen only a third in two years that of woolen cloths has fallen two-thirds, of worsted stuffs one-half, and of carpets four-fifths.

THE USE OF PARIS GREEN.—Notwithstanding the fright of some chemists, Paris green remains the only effective antidote to potato bugs, as it is to cockroaches and other vermin, and is yet no injurious results have been experienced from it. It is of course intensely poisonous, but on the other hand it is very green, cannot be mistaken for any other kind of food, and will not be eaten from choice by any creature, until mixed with farinaeous food. So far as the danger from its use in the fields is concerned, ordinary caution is a complete protection. The consumption of it, by the way, is immense, and 1,000,000 pounds have been marketed in New York in the past fortnight. It is rather odd that the agricultural demand should have set in at a time when green blights are giving way to those of the color of the body of the house. As to the potato bug, we believe he is a transient infestation, and after flourishing for two or three seasons passes on to new conquests. What he will do when he gets to Halifax is not clear.

A GRAND CONCLUSION.—Here is the closing paragraph of the Rev. Joseph Cook's last lecture—the last of a three or four months' series:

The Koran says that when Abraham set out on his travels he was insufficiently acquainted with religious truth. He saw the star of evening, and he said to his followers: "This is my God." But the star went down, and Abraham said: "I care not for any gods which set." He waited until the constellations appeared and then said: "These are my gods." But the galaxies were carried beneath the west, and he said: "I care not for gods which set." When the moon uprose he said: "This is my God." But the moon, too, went down. When the sun uprose he saluted it as king, but the sun wheeling sky carried the king of day behind the flaming pines of the west. And Abraham, in the holy twilight, turning his face toward the ascending morn, said to his people: "I give myself to Him who was, and is, and is to come, Father of the stars, and moon, and sun, and who never sets, because he is the Eternal Noon." [Great applause.]

COLORADO is building more railroads today than any other Western State or Territory, and her mines and her farms are being developed more rapidly than for years past. In addition to all this, the season of 1877 promises to be marked by an unusual amount of tourist travel. Last year little was done in this line, the Centennial not only keeping people out of Colorado, but taking our own people, East, so that the State was doubly impoverished in that particular. Colorado is also bound to get a great deal of the Black Hills "overflow" this summer, in addition to our regular and legitimate increase.—Democrat.

Oliver Wendell Holmes on the Liberalizing of Christianity.

It is a simple fact that the working belief in New England has been steadily approaching the ground occupied by what is known as liberal Christianity. Old Orthodoxy has been stripping itself like a circus-rider who throws off one garment after another, as it has ridden round the ring of successive generations. First came the scarlet hunting-suit of the witch-finder, then the Geneva cloak of the predestinarian, then the Jewish galabieh of the Sabbatarian, and I know not how many more and less, as we see the fair outlines of our common humanity which had been more or less obscured for a long time by these disguises. When I think of Increase Mather branding Robert Cole's book against the witch-declaration in the margin of the copy of college, of which he was President, and imagine his successor to-day taking part in a similar ceremony, I feel as if you might as well read the stamp act to the great-grandchildren of the "Sons of Liberty" as the old New England and Congressional Faith to the descendants of the Pilgrims and Puritans. When I remember that the ancestor of the one little child, by whose thread of life alone I hold to the generation yet in the tender and happy infancy of the infants on trial before their final Judge by making Him say that although

"In this they may see hope to dwell, though they will allow the earliest room in hell." When I remember that Jonathan Edwards, the great champion of a later word, and orthodox, spoke of children with certain expressions, as "young vipers" and "infinitely filthy little devils" in the sight of God—"exposed every day to eternal burnings"—and think what a universal cry of outraged motherhood would silence this Herald of the angels in the Boston of to-day, I can believe that almost any cherished dogma which stands in the way of a true Catholic union of all believers in a eternal goal of righteousness may fade out as a bootee, if it is not blotted out as inhuman, and therefore ungodly. I am not, therefore, writing on any one but myself, mention a few of the stumbling-blocks which will stand in the way of some who have many sympathies of what is called the liberal school of thinkers? I believe they are quite as much theological. Some of these doctrines might at once be repudiated by those who hold other beliefs, which in reality grew out of them: The notion that man is responsible for the fact of suffering and death, whereas both existed long before his appearance on our planet. The notion that he can be such a thing as a natural moral evil; as if any one but the God of nature could be responsible for nature's effects. The notion of sin as a transferable object. As philanthropy has ridged us of chattel slavery, so philosophy must rid us of chattel sin and all its logical consequences. The notion that what we call sin is anything else than inevitable, unless the Deity has seen fit to give every human being a perfect nature and develop it by a perfect education. The oversight of the fact that all moral relations between man and his Maker are reciprocal, and must meet the approval of man's enlightened conscience before he can render true and heartfelt homage to the power that called him into being. And is not the greatest obligation to an eternal God on the side of the greatest wisdom and the greatest power? The notion that the Father of mankind is subject to the absolute control of a certain malignant entity known under the false name of Satan, or subject to any law such as we have made for the father of the prodigal son meet him with an account-book and pack him off to jail, instead of welcoming him back and treating him to the fatted calf. The notion that useless suffering is in any sense a satisfaction for any man's sin, or an evil that is to be previous one. I believe many of you will agree with me in rejecting these notions, and that, in due time, these and all such stumbling-blocks will be removed from the path of any whom they prevent from going side by side with you in the grand army of the soldiers of humanity and servants of God.—Address at the Music Hall Unitarian Festival.

Postmaster General Key on His Position. Speech at Charlotte, N. C., 1st Week.

"My Friends: The position I occupy is an anomalous one. Ten months ago to the best of my ability I was canvassing in Tennessee, urging the election of Samuel J. Tilden to the Presidency of the United States, and now I find myself, to my own surprise, and I have no doubt to yours also, a confidential officer and member of the Cabinet of Rutherford B. Hayes. But, as previous to that election, I find myself a Democrat still, and you can readily understand, therefore, that I occupy a very embarrassing and anomalous position in a political point of view. The first proposition was first made to me—when I was requested to become a member of Mr. Hayes' Cabinet—my inclination was to decline it, and I have no doubt a great many people of the South thought I brought me to a very short reflection, however, brought me to a very different conclusion, thought when the President of the United States extended his hand to the people of the South through me, it was my duty to receive that hand, lest millions of the South be left to their own devices, whereas if I made a mistake there would be no sufferer but myself, and as announced at the time, as is well known throughout the whole country, I accepted the position in the Cabinet of the President of the United States, and the simple intention of assisting the people of the South if I could regain some of the ground that they have lost during the last few years. The President required no pledge or promise of me; I went into the Cabinet without any instructions and as independent as any man could be. The South if I had given the secret councils, and would have been in his council to-day had I been in Washington City. This was a most extraordinary confidence on the part of the Administration and one which I never will betray. The position is of course embarrassing; yet it is my duty to assist in supporting and building up the Administration if I can rather than seek to destroy it. As the President says, I take it that there is no difference whether a man is a Republican or Democrat, if he serves his party best who serves his country best."

OUR WELLSBURG LETTER.

WELLSBURG, June 4. Editors Intelligencer: Last Thursday evening the pupils of the Wellsburg High School, under the management of W. H. Anderson, the principal, and his accomplished better half, gave at the School Hall one of the most interesting public entertainments that it has been our good fortune to witness. The exercises consisted of songs, essays, dialogues, recitations and declamations, and were rendered in a very acceptable manner. Great credit is due the scholars and teachers, for the excellent training displayed. An audience fee of ten cents was charged. The proceeds are to go towards paying for an organ for the use of the school. Willie St. Clair received a fine pen and ink holder for the best in penmanship. Misses Daisy Crothers and Annie Beare were each presented a fine pocket Bible for punctuality, good deportment, &c. The motto, "The dearest interest of a nation is the education of its youth," exhibited among other ornaments of the hall, was a well selected and should be indelibly stamped on the minds of all parents and guardians. Messrs. James Matthews and William Nicholls, journeyman bricklayers, start Wednesday next for San Francisco, Cal. A. W. Kuhn and W. W. Calentine, have returned from the West. They have bought land near Ottawa, Franklin county, Kansas. Elijah Gover, who left here early in the spring and went to Dallas,

Texas, has left there and located at Ottawa.

The temperance reading rooms are well patronized. "A good rain is much needed now," has frequently been remarked hereabouts lately. Crops are suffering in consequence of a drought. The roads are dusty, making travel anything but pleasant. There is the largest bloom of the locust trees noticed for many years, said to be a good sign for many things in which mankind is interested, other than giving the busy bee plenty of material to work upon. G. B. C.

Mr. Blaine and His Plans.

Mr. Blaine spent two weeks here on purely private business; but, of course, there was of necessity a great deal of politics mingled with this private business. He was overrun with callers, and could not respond to one-half the invitations to breakfast and dinner which were showered upon him. He thus saw many people from almost every section of the Union; and it is a significant fact that he left here more determined than ever to oppose the policy of the Administration, and this determination was based upon reliable information obtained from personal contact with active politicians of his party. He was courted in every way by the Administration, invited to dine and lunch at the White House, and to breakfast and dine with Sherman and Evans, all of which invitations were accepted, as a matter of course. He was not a party to any movement looking to the organization of a new political party. That is not a part of his programme. He means to be the champion of the Simon-pure Republican party, and all his abilities will be directed to arouse the ancient fervor of the disciples of the ancient faith. The administration party will be attacked on the ground that they have abandoned the ancient faith and deliberately, with corrupt intent, attempted to destroy the Republican party. The purpose of Blaine is to carry high the standard of the Simon-pure Republican party, and to rally to it the loyal element of the North, which was so irresistibly strong during the war; and through the reconstruction period Blaine struck the keynote of the Republican party. In his Andersonville speech, and the entire canvass on the Republican side was made on the issue he then so sharply and forcibly raised. His speech on the presentation of Kellogg's credentials as Senator from Louisiana this spring was the key-note of the campaign which will be begun in earnest against Hayes' administration the moment Congress meets in October next.
