Another of the "Register's" Snake Stories.

This time the Register's snake story of West Virginia politics bears a Charleston date. The writhings of the snake are frightful to behold.

The aim is to make trouble in the Republican party, particularly to break up the organization. As a first and necessary step the caucus is to be broken.

Above all things there must be no caucus to declare the will of the party for United States senator. A caucus would certainly result in the choice of Mr. Elkins; and that the Democratic politicians do not want.

These same politicians remember what happened in their own party. Senator Camden was the choice of a majority of the Democrats in the legislature.

Every politician of them knows that from that day the Democratic organization in West Virginia began to go to pieces. It has never been the same since.

If the Democratic politicians could bring about the same condition just as the Republican party is going into legislative control, just as it is sending to Congress a solid delegation, the end would be brought very near to the beginning, and there would be rejoicing in the Democratic camp.

The Democratic politicians are wasting their time. They will not be asked for any advice in these matters. The Republicans of West Virginia have shown themselves thoroughly competent to attend to their own affairs.

The Republicans in the legislature will hold a caucus and be bound by it. They will caucus on a good many questions, to the advantage of the state and probably to the serious discomfort of some Democratic politicians.

With the exception of a little bawling up at the sugar trust—which may be entirely Pickwickian—the President is very tame on the tariff question. November 6 seems to have taken some of the bounce out of him.

In campaign time those Democrats who undertook to instruct the public insisted that it was not the Democratic purpose to do anything more with the tariff. So far as the Democratic party was concerned the tariff question was settled for many years.

Now comes the President, the leader of his party, and urges three important changes in a tariff but three months old and the work of Democratic hands. He urges that coal and iron ore be put on the free list and that the differential duty in favor of refined sugar be taken off.

It is not probable that the senate will approve these recommendations or even one of them. The sugar trust is too strong to be interfered with. Free coal and iron ore will hardly be more attractive to the Democratic senators who opposed that policy than it was before the election.

If Congress will not give the necessary authority to issue another sort of bond to meet current ordinary demands on the treasury, the President wants Congress to understand that he will go right on issuing bonds any how. This is bold, to say the least.

This Is Instructive. Senator Butler, of South Carolina, cannot be called a Bourbon. He can learn. His recent investigations, superinduced by the progress of the suspicious Tillman, led him to the conclusion that the election law of that state is "utterly subversive of the constitutional provisions in regard to elections by the people."

purpose until recently, for if it had not done so Senator Butler would not be in the senate. The intention was to enact a law that would disfranchise the colored voters of the state.

It is rather a droll sight to see Senator Butler hurling the constitution of the state at a law which was entirely agreeable to him and his party until they could no longer profit by it.

When these things can be it is not a vain hope that before long there may be a free ballot and a fair count in the lower latitudes of this country.

The President does not quite appreciate the criticisms on the pension policy of his administration. No honest man objects to rooting out every fraud and bringing the guilty to justice. Every honest man objects to cutting off pensions duly granted under the law and then putting the suspended pensioners to their proof to show that the pensions were properly granted.

The President glorifies the policy which encourages imports. Everything imported to take the place of something we can produce in this country takes that much from the labor of the country and by that much impairs the national wealth. The President and the politicians of his party are unable to appreciate this, but the people have come to understand it, and their improved understanding accounts for the landslide of 1894.

When the Register says that Mr. Elkins has arranged a slate of any kind it knows it is not telling the truth. There is not a man in West Virginia who can say truthfully that Mr. Elkins is taking any part in the distribution of the honors or emoluments under the new legislature. As to setting up a slate ticket for 1896—that is too silly to talk about.

There is nothing striking in the President's message except his recommendation of more tariff legislation and a general overhauling of the bank circulation. It was expected that he would go further on the currency question and recommend the simplification of the government issues on a more homogeneous basis. This branch of the currency question he does not touch.

Wheeling creek has resumed business at the old stand for the first time in six months. It is pleasant to renew an agreeable old acquaintance.

The President takes up with the "Baltimore plan," so roundly denounced by the silverites. Now shall we see some furly?

There were flowers on Colonel Brockbridge's desk. Wonder whether anybody thought to send some to Miss Polard.

"Does politics pay?" asks an exchange. Go ask of a defeated candidate. He knows.

Duluth is believed to have a suicide club. Duluth is a hard place to live in.

Mr. Edward S. Ellis has written some very entertaining books for boys, and is as dear to the heart of the reading youth of the land as Oliver Optic. Mr. Ellis' latest work, "Among the Eskimos; or, Adventures Under the Arctic Circle," is one of the most interesting. Besides the many and exciting adventures of his characters, he gives a very instructive account of the land of perpetual ice and snow, and the customs, habits and home life of the peculiar people of that region.

One of the peculiar novels of the season is "My Pretty Jane," by Effie Adelaide Rowlands. It is the story of a woman who is in love with a man whom she petulantly discards for an English lord, whom she does not even respect. Her step-daughter, "My Pretty Jane," falls in love with her discarded lover. It is then that the selfish, sordid unloveliness of her character comes out. She throws every obstacle in the way of the lovers, but who finally marry in spite of her. Her husband dying, however, she lies to the young wife and tries her fascinations on the husband, her quondam lover. She is, however, defeated in her schemes, as she deserves to be. Some of the situations are strong, but it is a book which the critical reader would put down with "that tired feeling."—J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia; Frank Stanton, Wheeling, W. Va.

In "The Old, Old Story," by Rosa Nouchette Carey, the novel opens with the death of Lady Car, and it was understood that her husband was a broken-hearted man. "Reginald will never get over it," observed Mrs. Wyndham, his sister. But "Reggie" did get over, thoroughly and effectually; and the manner in which he accomplished it, and the circumstances that led to his second marriage, with a good deal of plot and counter-plot, are told in fifty-three chapters of nearly five hundred pages. The book is simply what its title indicates, the old, old story.—J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia; Frank Stanton, Wheeling, W. Va.

James Otis has written a very clever story in "Chasing a Yacht," which will prove to be of consuming interest to boys. Two boys have managed to run a steam yacht for the double purpose of pleasure and profit, and after carefully fitting it up they launch her, only to find the next morning that she is gone—stolen, as they later discover, by two other boys, who had been refused a half interest in her. The chase of the heroes after their property is full of adventure, making a book that is bound to interest the dullest boy.—Penn Publishing Co., Philadelphia; Frank Stanton, Wheeling, W. Va.

"School and Parlor Comedies," and "Shoemaker's Best Selections" for reading and recitation, are two gems in their line.—Penn Publishing Co., Philadelphia; Frank Stanton, Wheeling, W. Va.

THEIR OPINIONS.

How the Message Was Received by the Leaders—Various Comments by Congressmen. WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—Speaker Crisp said he had no opportunity to examine the message carefully, owing to the frequent interruptions, and was not prepared to express an opinion until he had done so.

Mr. Wilson, chairman of the ways and means committee, expressed great gratification over the President's vigorous recommendation of the free coal and iron bills sent to the senate, and his endorsement of the recommendation for the abolition of the differential on refined sugar.

General Tracey, Democrat, of New York, said he would favor some sort of a banking scheme as suggested by the President, which would divorce the issue of circulating notes from the government, but he did not think any financial legislation would be enacted by this Congress.

Mr. Outhwaite, Democrat, Ohio, said it was an able presentation of the state of government affairs, and particularly commended the President's recommendation for striking out the differential on refined sugar.

Mr. Harter, Democrat, Ohio, characterized the President's banking scheme as a good, long step in the right direction, but personally he thought he ought to go further. The government, in his opinion, ought not to guarantee the payment of national bank notes or of any corporation. The notes of a bank were as safe without as with the government guarantee. He expressed his regret that the President had not suggested a plan for the gradual withdrawal of the greenbacks.

Mr. Springer, Democrat, Illinois, said the president's message is largely devoted to routine recommendations in reference to the business of the departments. In reference to tariff his suggestions are wise and timely. He does not recommend any general legislation, but merely the correction of some of the defects of the tariff law of last session.

Senator Blanchard, Democrat, Louisiana, said: "I approve of the state bank recommendation. I am opposed to the repeal of one-eighth and one-tenth of a cent differential on sugar for the reason that seventy-four per cent of seven million pounds of sugar produced in Louisiana shares in the differential."

Senator Vilas, Democrat, Wisconsin: "It is a good business message." Senator Chandler, Republican, New Hampshire, said: "The message is a very commonplace document. It ignores the fact that we have a great silver question on hand, and it almost ignores the tariff question except in reference to the 'pop-gun' bills, and in making the absurd proposition of admitting free ships in order to help American shipping. That is about all there is to the message, beyond a recital of departmental routine."

Representative Reed, of Maine, declared he had nothing to say with regard to the message, and Mr. Burrows, of Michigan, had no comment to make.

Regarding that portion of the message relating to foreign affairs, Representative Storer, of Ohio, said it impressed him as being of great vagueness on every subject of real interest to the government. Mr. Storer continuing, said: "No mention is made whatever of the construction of the Nicaragua canal, although a year ago the President heartily favored the project and still great space is given to a superficial review of the entanglements between Nicaragua and the Mosquito country, as to which our only national interest lies in the fact that Bluefields, if made a British port, would command any canal they build over the Nicaraguan route."

Representative Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, said in part: "The President either has not heard as yet of the elections that recently took place, or does not think they are of any special significance. There is absolutely nothing new in the message."

Of the Democratic members of the senate committee on finance, Senators Voorhees, Harris and Vest asked to be excused from expressing any opinion on the financial view advanced by the President, and Senator Jones, of Arkansas, would only repeat what he had heretofore said, that he did not believe that any financial legislation would be possible during the present session. Republican members of the committee were almost as much disinclined to talk as their Democratic colleagues. Senator Sherman would go no further than to say the message contained nothing striking.

Senator Gorman, while delving to directly discuss the recommendations of the message, said that at the short session that was now beginning action would depend largely upon the willingness of the Republicans to permit anything to be done.

Senator Brice, Democrat, of Ohio, said: "There are, I believe, thirty-eight pages of the message, of which thirty-seven are figures, while the remaining page is given up to urging the adoption of the Baltimore financial plan. I have not had time to verify the figures, but as for the Baltimore plan, it strikes me as a pure dream. Its adoption would certainly demoralize the finances of the country."

SPRECKLES' CHECK.

The Sugar King Draws a Check for a Million and a Half on One Bank. SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 3.—Considerable interest has been aroused here over the check for a million and a half which Claus Spreckles, the sugar king, drew Saturday on the Nevada bank. The check was made payable to the California bank, and it was thought that possibly Mr. Spreckles had transferred his account from one bank to the other. Mr. Spreckles said to-day that this was not the case; that he still had a large deposit in the Nevada bank. When asked how large that deposit was Mr. Spreckles said he thought he could draw several checks without exhausting his account. He refused to say what the check was for, but intimated that it was to purchase some of the new issue of government bonds, for which the Bank of California had subscribed one million, eight hundred thousand dollars.

CHILLINESS, when other people feel warm enough, is a sign of biliousness, or of malarial poisons—so is a furred or coated tongue, loss of appetite, headaches or giddiness, and a dull, drowsy, debilitated feeling. DRUGGIST WILCOX.

He Talks Strongly Because He Knows. Many Will Read This With the Utmost Fear and Terror. Danger and Death Follow Us Every Step We Take.

Too many people become insane. Too many drop dead. Too many become paralyzed. The papers are constantly recording such cases, and even then only a small portion ever reach the public. It is enough to frighten anybody; and what does it mean?

It means that people overwork, overstrain and weaken their nerves, their heart, their brain, and then they suffer the terrible, but natural consequences. Do you belong to this class? If so, look to your health. Read the warning words of E. T. Wilcox, Esq., a well-known druggist, residing at Pleasanton, N. Y.:

"I have used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy for some time. I have sold all kinds of proprietary medicines in our drug store, and know what is said about them all. Whenever I feel nervous and run down, I use Dr. Greene's Nervura, and it does the business every time. I think it the best medicine, and it certainly is the best seller.

"I am now using it myself.

"Of course I have the choice of all medicines sold in our store, and from my own personal experience, and reports of others, I am perfectly satisfied that Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is the best."

Mr. Wilcox has devoted his life entirely to the drug business, and when a man so experienced in medicines is satisfied that there is nothing in the world so good as Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, it is the strongest possible recommendation. Everybody who takes it speaks just as highly of it. It makes strong nerves and builds up the worn-out and run-down system. It prevents insanity, paralysis, and promotes long life.

The reason why this great curative has had so phenomenal a success is because it is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. Dr. Greene, of 25 West Fourteenth street, New York City, who stands ready at all times to answer for the action of his medicine.

He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone, at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.
