BALLAHOE.
Chicago Dispatch.
The day is a-dying, the west wind a-flying,
The mountain is wrapped in his mantle of snow;
And mournful the dirges of Shannon's black surges,
As gathers the storm-cloud on bold Ballahoe.

Oh, haste thee, my dear one; oh, haste thee, my near one!
The storm descends fast to the valley below;
Thy lover awaits thee; what is it he bates thee?
Oh, why dost thou tarry on bold Ballahoe?

With shrill pipes resounding, their flocks quickly rounding,
The shepherds now fain in their shelters would go.
Oh, Erin's fair daughter, beware the wild water
That whirls in the shadow of bold Ballahoe!

But swifter the tide flows, the river more wide grows.
"Oh, father, I perish, the waters below.
No help can come nigh me. Oh, why did I hie me
At morn to thy fastness, oh, bold Ballahoe?"

As breaks the bright morning, all nature adorning,
All wrapped is the village that loved her in woe:
Whilst ocean ward drifting, o'er sands ever shifting,
Behold thy last victim, oh, bold Ballahoe!

A TOUCH OF NATURE.

"You appear to forget that this fellow Vaughan has the reputation of being one of the most desperate criminals that ever stepped. 'King of the Coiners' he is rightly named, but is chiefly because he is at the head of a dangerous gang. And because, by a lucky chance, you have found out that he is living in private lodgings under an assumed name, makes it none the less risky for us two alone to attempt his capture."

It was in a decidedly dissatisfied tone that Mr. Roche, the well-known detective, urged upon his superior officer the hazardous nature of the business they were upon, but Arnold Bond merely smiled good-humoredly as he responded:

"Whatever risk there may be, Roche, I think I shall face. And as I expect to take our man entirely by surprise, in the very bosom of his family, I don't anticipate much resistance. Still, I am prepared for it, and don't think that he will easily give us the slip. For the rest, you will simply carry out my instructions," and the last few words were spoken in a way which effectually silenced any further objections from the other.

The last rays of twilight were fading when, on this summer evening, the two disguised detectives knocked at the door of an unpretentious-looking house in a quiet street of the east end of London.

Almost immediately, a respectable looking woman opened the door, and stepping back, said, before Bond could speak:

"Ah, sir, I don't believe they expected you again to-night, but it's well you've come, for the poor mite is very bad, they say."

With the ever ready wit of a shrewd detective, quick to take advantage of the slightest error, Bond instantly checked the exclamation of surprise which sprang instinctively to his lips, and stepping in quietly observed:

"Indeed! I am sorry to hear that. Our usual friend could not come himself, but as his partner I thought it advisable to look in again. Let me see—Mrs. Sutton, second floor, is it not?"

Neither of the detectives scarce ventured to breathe as they anxiously waited to see the result of this rather hazardous remark.

"Oh, I took you for Dr. Dalton himself, sir. Yes, second floor. It's rather dark, but I daresay you can find your way up. Lor'! I never knewed before as how the doctor had a partner."

"This gentleman is merely a friend of mine. If you don't mind, he will wait for me in the passage. I don't suppose I shall be many minutes," Bond said, inwardly chuckling with satisfaction at the lucky mistake which had undoubtedly saved him and his companion no little trouble at the outset.

Leaving his subordinate—who had previously received careful instructions—Arnold Bond, with heart beating a little faster than usual, cautiously mounted the dark, narrow staircase and tapped at a closed door facing him.

Then, without waiting for any reply, he instantly opened it, and so quickly stepped into the room and shut the door after him again.

"Surrender yourself my prisoner, Michael Vaughan, alias Ralph Sutton," he said, sternly, as a tall, bearded man sprang hastily to his feet with a startled exclamation, and confronted him.

A momentary pause, then, with an oath, the coiner snatched up a chair, and raising it above his head, was about to hurl it at the detective, but as quickly dropped it as his eye rested on the service revolver steadily leveled at him.

"Trapped!" he ejaculated, savagely glaring at the officer. "And in this tomfool fashing, too. But there's treachery here," he added, fiercely, "and if I——"

"Michael, Michael," interposed a women's voice in pleading tones, "you're forgetting poor little Jess. You know the doctor said she must be kept perfectly quiet."

"Ah, Jess, poor mite," said the coiner. "No wonder I forgot everything when Bond himself, jumped up before me like a magic! Well, I'm fairly nabbed; but if it wasn't for her," he added, with a bitter emphasis, pointing to a bed in the corner of the room, "you'd never take me in this squeamish fashion."

Agreeably disappointed in the expectation that the desperate criminal before him would offer resistance, but never for a moment relaxing his vigilance, Bond glanced quickly about the room.

The bed was occupied by a little girl of about six years of age, who, it needed no second glance to perceive, was very near to death, indeed. She was very wide awake, staring in mute terror from the detective to her father and back again. Nor did the white face of the coiner's wife, who stood trembling by the bedside, express much less alarm than the child's.

"Let's clear out before you frighten my young 'un to death," said the coiner in a quieter voice. "Never mind, Jess," he went on, turning to the child and speaking in such a tender and soothing tone that Bond stared with astonishment. "Perhaps, soon, I shall come back, and then you'll be better, and we will——"

Vaughan's voice faltered, and he paused.

"Ah, take him away, sir, but don't hurry him over what he very well knows must be the last good by he'll ever say to his child! What hope there may have been you'll take with you; but to take it away at this moment——"

The wretched mother, unable to articulate another word, sank into a chair, hid her face in her hands, and gave way to a sudden outburst of grief.

"Is the gentleman going to take you away, then, daddy?" the child said, feebly. "Oh, don't go! I do so want you to-night." Then, looking at the detective with great, earnest eyes, little Jess continued, half indignantly, half pathetically: "How would your little girl like you to be taken away if she was ill, and wanted you to stop with her dreadfully bad?"

An involuntary smile gathered for one brief instant on the stern countenance of Bond.

"It's true, worse luck," whispered the coiner, stepping near his captor. "Poor little beggar, she's mighty bad, and the doctor says the next few hours means life or death. Mor'n anything, she's got to be kept particular quiet, so let's clear out and leave 'em; and, please God, I'll see her again yet. Yes, my prince of traps, you can see what makes me such a miserable coward, eh?"

As if ashamed of the tremor in his speech, the coiner turned, and taking down his hat, crushed it upon his head, and approached the door with a rigid countenance and twitching lips. Apparently, he dared not trust himself to take even a farewell look at his child. But as Arnold Bond moved toward the door also, his glance fell for an instant upon the thin white face of little Jess, who had already fallen back exansted. She was gazing steadily at her father, who, however, kept his face carefully averted. The pitiful, pleading expression in the sick child's eyes struck the detective to the heart, for it was a look which expressed more eloquently than any words the bitter disappointment she felt at seeing one she dearly loved about to be taken from her this night of all nights.

The detective paused abruptly, hesitated a moment, and then the resolute expression on his features softened suddenly, and he said, in a half jocular tone, to hide the emotion he could not entirely control:

"Stay, Vaughan, I can't do it, after all. I can't take such a cruel advantage of even you at a time like this! That's all, and good night!"

"Bond, Bond," cried the king of coiners, springing forward as he recovered from his momentary stupefaction, "Heaven prosper you for this! Bad as I am I hope I'll be able to give you your reward for this, if it's years to come."

A moment later the detective had gone. He had sacrificed an opportunity of adding enormously to his reputation.

* * *

It was a year later before the authorities succeeded in discovering the "factory" where Vaughan and his confederates turned out the cleverly made counterfeit coins which had, for so long, been passed with apparent impunity in most quarters of the metropolis.

Arnold Bond had never seen the "King of the Coiners" since that night when the mere look of a sick child had been sufficient to make him turn from the stern path of duty—an advantage which the coiner naturally had been quick to avail himself of.

The very perfection of the false coins told that Vaughan had not forsaken his dangerous calling; and the manner, too, in which they were passed showed more and more that the police had no ordinary criminal to deal with.

But, after indefinite trouble, Bond had found out all he had been wanting long to know, and this night, or rather in the early morning hours, he had surrounded with his men the detached suburban villa of such irreproachable appearance, and had himself succeeded in getting into the house with a skill that would have made a practiced burglar look with envious astonishment.

The clever detective was very desirous, if possible, of capturing the whole gang of coiners at one raid, and that, too, before they could do away with the slightest trace of their occupation. A laudable endeavor, but it was a wish which was to bring him nearer to death than he had ever been before.

Bond seemed to have the house to himself. Down in the basement, however, he could hear a clinking noise every now and then, and at frequent intervals the sound of men's voices floated to his ears, accompanied by muffled laughter.

Having satisfied himself, as far as he dared, on several points, he finally began to creep with all care along the passage toward the front door, which he could see was exceptionally well bolted and barred.

He had gotten within a few feet of the door, and was already thinking how neatly he had managed everything, when suddenly and without the slightest warning the whole floor seemed to cave in beneath his feet, and as he threw out his arms with a startled cry the trap he had unconsciously turned completely over and threw him into a large, well-lighted cellar below. Before he could rise some seven or eight men had seized him, and, amid a storm of oaths and threats, bound hand and foot, despite his strenuous struggles.

"You fools!" cried Bond, exasperated beyond measure. "Let me tell you the game is up! My men surround the place, and this little joke will only make matters a good deal worse for you. You'd better——"

"Joke!" repeated one of the coiners, with a fierce laugh. "Well, we'll see. What say you boys? What says our oath?"

"Death to the trap what bowls us out!" answered a burly, villainous-looking fellow. "Surrounded we may be, but what of that? Haven't we means for getting away through the burrow at the first alarm?"

Without another word one of the coiners stepped up to the prostrate officer, and with a savage exclamation slipped the noose of a rope over Bond's head and drew it uncomfortably tight around his neck. Another of the desperate crew at once threw the other end of the rope over one of the beams which supported the flooring above.

The detective now recognized to the full extent the really serious nature of his position; and, half dazed by the terrible calamity which had so suddenly befallen him, was giving up all hope, when, for the first time, the leader of the gang—none other than Michael Vaughan himself—spoke.

"Leave him to me lads, and get you all gone while you may. Ah, there is not a jiffy to lose. Hark! Hear the traps? They're breaking in already. Off with you all!"

"Let the dogs bark!" hissed one of the ruffians, with a course. "We don't go until we've choked the life out of the rat who put 'em on our trail. Run him up sharp, and leave him for a pleasant surprise to his friends!"

With these words the unfortunate officer was jerked off his feet, but at the same moment Vaughan snatched up a formable knife, and at a single stroke severed the rope about his head. Yet another stroke or two, and before the astonished gang of desperadoes could recover themselves the detective had regained his liberty.

"I'm with you, Mr. Bond," ejaculated Vaughan, with a grim determination stamped upon his white face. "Aha! see how my mutinous crew shrink back from your bulldog! And by all that's lucky for us both, here come your men. Another minute's delay, and I reckon it would have gone a bit hard for us both."

Almost before he had finished speaking the long, cellar-like room became for a short space a scene of desperate struggling, the walls echoing with a chorus of savage cries and shouts.

Of all the members of the gang, their leader alone offered no resistence, but lapsed into moody silence.

Only when the opportunity offered, did he whisper into the detective's ear:

"You see I haven't forgotten what I once promised, sir, although you only had a smasher's word for it. Perhaps you didn't know it, but I reckon you had the life of my little Jess in your hands that night a year ago; and maybe you'll agree now that I've paid a fair price for it. As for me—but, there, we're on even terms once more."

FINANCE AND TRADE.

The Features of the Money and Stock Markets.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—Money on call easy at 1@1½ per cent; last loan 1 per cent; closed at 1 per cent. Prime mercantile paper 2½@4½ per cent. Sterling exchange strong with actual business in bankers' bills at $4 88@4 88¼ for demand. Silver certificates 61½c bid. The total sales of stocks to-day were 375,391 shares.

There was increased activity on the speculation of the stock exchange to-day and the market was characterized by a marked degree of strength with the exception of slight reactions, and the opening, shortly after mid-day and around delivery hour the tendency of the general market was upward. Among the most potent influences in the market was the improved prospect of the passage of the Patterson railroad pooling bill, the objections to which, interpreted by the interstate commerce commission, having been withdrawn, with a probability of legislative action being taken by Congress on the currency question.

Sugar again broke the record of individual sales, the transactions thereon for the day exceeding 193,000 shares. The promised directors' statement was not forthcoming and the only explanation of its non-appearance given was that President Havemeyer and Secretary Searles were not at the office to-day. The stock fluctuated widely, opening ¾ per cent higher at 87¼, advancing with intermediate reaction to 90½, selling off to 89, reaching 91¾, the top price for the day, just before the close, the final sale being only ⅛ per cent below the best and 4¾ per cent above yesterday's closing. The preferred stock gained 2¼ per cent. There was heavy covering in the Granger. Rock Island advanced steadily, closing at the best and 1 per cent above last night's prices. The other more important gains on the day are: Tobacco 2, Cordage preferred 1⅝, do common 1½, General Electric 1⅝, and Western Union and Lead 1¼ per cent.

The bond market was firm in the early session but after mid-day became strong in sympathy with the share speculation. The transactions were on a large scale, the total of which were $1,895,000.

New York.—There was more business doing in all departments of cotton goods and dress fabrics, and the collective sales for the future delivery were fairly important. A decidedly better feeling was manifested by visiting purchasers and the opinion is growing that values are at the bottom. The jobbing price of Atlantic J. cashmeres and X serges have been advanced to 26c; printing cloths steady to firm at 2⅝c.

Sales for the week about 260,000 pieces.

Petroleum.

Oil City.—Opened at 89⅝c; highest 89¾c; lowest 88⅝c; closed at 88⅝c; sales 8,000 barrels; clearances 60,000 barrels; shipments 94,122 barrels; runs 76,114 barrels.

New York.—Petroleum strong; Pennsylvania oil sales none; January option sales none; closed at 88¾c bid; Lima oil, sales none.

Metals.

New York—Pig iron quiet. Tin barely steady; straits $13 65; plates dull. Spelter weak. Copper strong; brokers' price 9⅝c.

Wool.

New York—Wool quiet.
