WHEELING, SEPTEMBER 29, 1898.

REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL TICKETS.

- First District. BLACKBURN B. DOVENER of Ohio County. Second District. ALSTON G. DAYTON of Barbour County. Third District. WILLIAM S. EDWARDS of Kanawha County. Fourth District. R. H. FRIESEN of Ritchie County. OHIO COUNTY REPUBLICAN TICKET. (Nominated June 23, 1898.) For House of Delegates, H. F. BEHRENS, H. W. CONNELLY, HARRY W. McCLURE, RALPH MCCOY. County Superintendent of Free Schools, GEORGE B. BIGGS.

Death of Hon. Thomas F. Bayard.

In the death of Thomas F. Bayard, the United States loses one of its most distinguished statesmen, one who stood in the foremost rank, and whose distinguished services to his country required full recognition from men of all parties. During his long public career he held the respect and esteem of the country because of his high character and strict integrity, and although a Democratic leader of great ability and distinction, numbered among his closest and most confidential friends many leaders of the Republican party.

Deserves Encouragement.

The movement on foot among the local Knights of Pythias to secure the grand lodge meeting for Wheeling next year is worthy of the encouragement of the public, and particularly the business public. The assembly means more for a community than might at first be thought, for the membership of the order in the state is about ten thousand, the meetings last for three or four days, and the Uniformal Rank attends from various places in bodies, bringing together representative citizens from every portion of the state, as well as from Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio.

Wheeling never loses by encouraging such gatherings from abroad.

Her open doors of hospitality already have a reputation beyond her limits, far beyond, and it is to be hoped that the local Knights will succeed in their efforts to impress upon the state body that it need go no further to insure a hearty welcome.

The La Fayette Monument.

A proclamation by Governor Atkinson, setting apart the 19th of October as La Fayette day, to be observed by the schools of the state, is published elsewhere. This is in accordance with the general movement in the country for the erection of a monument to General La Fayette in Paris, to be unveiled during the Exposition of 1900, by which the people are to contribute to the project through the agency of the educational institutions of the country.

Now would be a good time for the school children to read up on the history of the French general, to whom this country and the cause of American liberty owe so much in the time of the great struggle for independence.

Such occasions can be made to answer the double purpose of instruction in history for the youth, as well as to assist in the main purpose.

This country will hesitate to believe the story from San Francisco that the arms now being furnished to the insurgents in the Philippines are being furnished through German government agencies.

No official information by this government from Dewey or Oils confirms such a story, and we may feel assured that they have their eyes open. If it should turn out, however, that such a thing is going on, the disarming of the insurgents by our military authorities would be the legitimate result as a necessary move to insure peace. Matters are in good hands at Manila, and the United States has no cause for worry about unconfirmed newspaper reports.

The letter from the investigating commission to Secretary Alger, outlining the scope of the inquiry under the instructions received from President McKinley, indicates that no phase of the questions arising out of the conduct of the war is to be overlooked.

This certainly should satisfy the yellow journals enough to cause them to cease their tirades until the results are known. The letter of Secretary Alger to the President asking for the investigation doesn't read like the letter of a public officer who is afraid of an inquiry.

on that spot thirty-three years ago has been fulfilled. All has now been forgotten save the memory of the heroes on either side, and but one flag waves over the site of the Union, as sacredly regarded now, in the light of recent events, as ever before. May it ever be so.

Roosevelt's Triumph.

The nomination of Theodore Roosevelt to be the Republican candidate for governor of New York was a case of personal triumph such as has seldom been equalled in its nature in the history of politics in the country. In these days it is not a common thing for a candidate to receive almost unanimous support from those who have not been his political friends, but who, on the contrary, have always been opposed to him. It is an evidence that the Empire State has, temporarily, at least, demonstrated that the pressure of popular opinion can sweep aside all factional opposition to a popular hero, and carry everything before it, party leaders and all.

Roosevelt distinguished himself a reformer in New York City politics, and by so doing antagonized elements that were naturally against reform with a big "R." His courage never failed him, and he won at least the popular respect. This reputation he won both in the New York legislature and in the police board of the metropolis.

These things alone might not have won him the gubernatorial nomination in New York. The war came, and Colonel Roosevelt left his comfortable office in Washington to go to the front at the head of his regiment of Rough Riders. Their deeds and the courage and sacrifices of their commander need not here be repeated. All the country knows this magnificent record. You cannot down a military hero, fresh from the scenes of his exploits. The popular sentiment overcame every opposition. Former animosities were laid aside. All the means used to detract from his merits, even the one assailing the legitimacy of his citizenship, which was made clear and vindicated on the floor of the convention hall, were overwhelmed, and the opposition was caught up and brought into the enthusiastic demonstration which made his nomination unanimous.

Will this popular hero make a good governor? Yes. If honest convictions and the courage to carry them out, if personal integrity, sincere advocacy of good government, ability in all respects, if the esteem and the intelligence of the people—if all these things count for anything, Roosevelt will make a good governor.

Theodore Roosevelt is not a man who will heed the dictation of any one. He has a conscience and brains to back it. He is a loyal Republican. It was a good day's work for the Republican party, not only of New York, but of the country.

Another Royal Wedding.

Queen Victoria Will Have the Pleasure of Attending the Marriage of Her Great-Grand-Daughter. There is to be another marriage in the British royal family, a marriage which is more interesting to Queen Victoria, than any of the others which have recently taken place. Princess Fedora, only daughter of Princess Charlotte, of Germany, is to marry one of the numerous German Princes that crop up from some hitherto undiscovered district when a husband is wanted.

The Princess Fedora is only seventeen years old, and scarcely out of short dresses; in the school room in the morning she wears her hair down her back. She is a slim girl, who looks young for her age, and it is safe to say that she will be the most youthful matron in the United Kingdom.

The reason for the hasty marriage of Princess Fedora is a family one. She is the eldest great-grand-daughter of Queen Victoria, and it is the wish of the grand old lady to see one of her great-see some good service yet if they are sent to Cuba or Puerto Rico, to do garrison duty. With the coming of the healthier season in the tropics they will be found ready and willing to go.

If Pecksniff honestly thinks the war department is all right, how does he explain the President's order for an investigation?—Register.

The President explains it himself in his order issued for the benefit of the public some time ago. Every newspaper in the country published it, including the Register and Intelligencer; the former, however, didn't comment in a way that would lead one to believe that it was welcome. The President wanted the truth. Read his instructions delivered to the commission, published the other day. The Intelligencer is like all others who want justice done. Why, on the other hand, are the yellow journals discouraging this investigation, and advocating that it be postponed until Congress meets? Honest men never fear an investigation, and always want the truth known. That's why the President made the order.

Our peace commissioners are said to be receiving a cold shoulder in Paris, where these gentlemen has not from the beginning of the war with Spain been very favorable to the United States. The city of Paris should remember that it is depending largely on the United States for the success of its coming expedition; that it learned a lesson which should profit by in the withdrawal of a great many thousands of dollars worth of trade it enjoyed from our fashionable wealthy people, when the antagonistic feeling toward this country was so manifest at the beginning of the late war.

But Paris, it seems, profits by nothing of this sort. In the meantime the peace commission will proceed with its work, unaffected by the coldness of the atmosphere.

The American military occupation of Cuba will begin with the next thirty days. Judging from the reports received from there, it is naturally presumed that the government will not delay matters longer than climatic and other conditions will make it necessary.

Let it be a decent campaign on both sides, gentlemen.—Register.

Agreed; but why not register yourself by setting an example?

"Well, Johnnie," said the minister to a little fellow, aged six, "I hear you are going to school now." "Yes, sir," was the reply. "And what part of it do you like best?" asked the good man. "Comin' home," was the prompt and truthful answer.

Harry, aged five, had his photograph taken recently, and when the proof was sent home his mamma said he looked too solemn and asked him why he didn't smile. "I did smile, mamma," replied the little fellow, "but I guess the man forgot to put it down."

Little five-year-old Clara's papa had been away on a protracted business trip, and her mamma was putting things in order and making sundry preparations for his return. Clara watched her closely for awhile and then observed: "Mamma, you make as much fuss as old Mr. Prodigal." "What do you mean, dear?" asked her mother. "I never heard of Mr. Prodigal." question of a hotel with satisfactory accommodations and reasonable rates is a vital one. Present rates are $3 per day and upward in gold, but the service is poor for the Americans are disgusted. Elegant rooms are furnished, but the beds are uncomfortable, the linen is not clean, and water for the bath is supplied in such quantities that the man from the "states" begins to think the liquid for removing Havana soil, etc. As for the closets, any third-class hotel in the United States would forever lose its custom if such a condition prevailed there as is to be seen in the finest of the Havana houses. The average North American also wants a breakfast before 10 or 12 o'clock and the lack of it leaves him weak. The hotel man who comes to Havana, now and rents one of these really attractive buildings, puts it in thorough repair, builds closets with the latest improvements, sets a table after American fashion, with American dishes, cooked in the manner best approved at home and served by American waiters, and finds here more kinds of money than any fellow who has gone to the Klondike for a fortune. Thousands of people from the republic will come this winter in search of the opportunity to get rich quick after the purely American style. These men will have means and they will want accommodations such as they have known at home. He who has the nerve to back his judgment in this matter will never have cause to regret his investment.

NEW TESTAMENT CRITICISM.

A Series of Interesting Lectures at the University of Pennsylvania to be Given. North American, Philadelphia, Sept. 24: At the University of Pennsylvania a course of six lectures will be delivered in the College Chapel at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of October 3, 4, 6, 7, 10 and 11.

This is the first series to be given upon the recently instituted George Leib Harrison foundation, which provides, among other things, for the engagement, from time to time, of eminent men of science and learning to lecture on matters of great interest and importance.

The subject is one that must command the interest of all intelligent, thinking persons, and the lecturer is Rev. Professor C. R. Gregory, of the University of Leipzig. Professor Gregory is recognized among scholars the world over as probably the leading specialist in the critical study and interpretation of the New Testament.

To Americans, and particularly, perhaps, Philadelphians, there is in the case of Dr. Gregory the added feeling, that he is a Philadelphian born, and got his school, college and seminary training chiefly in Philadelphia, and wholly in its vicinity.

On going to Germany to pursue further his theological studies, he betook himself to Leipzig University, with which, as student and teacher, he has been almost continuously connected ever since. He was early recognized in Germany as one of the most promising and progressive students of the New Testament, and advancement was opened to him such as has fallen to the lot of few, if any other, Americans.

Abdallah's Lesson. Who dwelt in Mecca, morning, noon and night. He came to Allah raised in prayer contrite. Was he and humble, pure in mind.

Inspired of heaven he—not so his wife. She daily stoed the market place within And bought and sold, nor deemed it any To mingle there in aces of toll and strife.

While thus he prayed she earned the food he ate. But she reprimanded her. Said he: "Thou shouldst devote thy life to prayer, like me. Serve not thyself. Allah alone is great!"

At last his words sank deep into her heart. "While Allah shall my poor life spare My voice to him I'll raise in holy prayer, Henceforth of righteousness I am a part."

Abdallah's heart was glad, and side by side They prayed until the sun in heaven was high. Then hunger to the pious man drew nigh And loudly clamored to be satisfied.

Abdallah's wife still prayed. No food was there. The good man's soul was vexed. "Tis plain," he said, "That even piety must needs be fed, And man cannot exist alone by prayer."

And thus he learned "Faith, without what she had." And, profling by what he learned, straightaway He went to work and prospered from that day.
