and climatic conditions and have made the "Queen City of the Plains" a convention city as well as an industrial center. Denver is noted for her structural beauty. By city ordinance frame buildings are not permitted within the fire limits, which embraces nearly all of the territory of the city. All of the streets are kept scrupulously clean. The downtown streets and the boulevards are paved with asphaltum, and granite blocks are used on the streets of the wholesale district. The city has block after block of imposing business houses, and at night nearly all of them are ablaze with electric display signs. Denver is truthfully termed a "City of Lights," and during the Democratic National Convention the city will be a "blaze of lights." The Committee on Arrangements is planning the most extensive and most brilliant lighting scheme during this convention ever attempted in the history of the city. The new auditorium, where the convention will be held, is unique in the history of the world's convention halls. It is being built with money raised by a bond issue voted by the citizens of Denver. City Park is the chief recreation ground. It contains 310 acres that eighteen years ago was open prairie. It is a beautiful spot, with shade trees, lakes, flower beds, stamens, a museum, a zoological garden, an aviary, and magnificent drives. Free band concerts are given daily during the summer. Denver has two summer theatres, one at Elitch's Gardens and the other at Manhattan Beach. The latter is a lake resort. These two amusement parks are within the city limits, in the direction of the mountains. Indeed there are two amusement parks there are the Tabor and the new Lakewood resort, where all sorts of amusements can be indulged in. During the Democratic National Convention Denver will be the largest city in America. Aside from the importance of the big convention, Denver will be a place to visit because of the opportunity for a genuine vacation. Fifty hotels have been engaged to furnish meals in all parts of the city, excursions will be conducted every day by the railroads that have their lines in the mountains, good cheer will be in the air, and men and women of national and world renown will be upon the scene. This city will be the center of the national stage at that time. Whether the convention is held in the city or at some other place, the city will be an important factor in the nation's affairs for months following, and all who visit Denver on that memorable occasion will be glad that they met their vacation in shadows of the Rocky Mountains. Elaborate preparations are underway to entertain the delegates and alternates that attend the convention. They will be given an opportunity to visit all parts of the state, interested in the state, they will be banqueted—in fact, prizes of entertainment too numerous to mention will be presented on all sides. "Most men at Denver, a mile high, and in the shadow of the Rocky Mountains" is a call that has gone forth all over the land. TOMATOES, very best sort, Transplanted. ISN'T IT WONDERFUL.

Comparatively speaking only a few years ago, people were compelled to spend a week or a month on the road to travel a hundred or so miles. Great hardships attended these journeys; the nights had to be spent in the open because the country was not settled thickly enough to allow travelers the luxury to sleep in a bed under a roof. Various inventions, such as the locomotive, the parlor and sleeping cars, make it a luxury to travel today. Work of all kinds has been made easier for everyone. All are aware of this. Yet, housekeepers drudge along with their work in the old way, when they could, by merely using the many suggestions which are put before them, make play of their work. The Bluefield Daily Leader has, by special arrangement, secured the distribution of a work which new is in many homes. None of the owners of the work would think of being without it again at any price. The name of this great work is the Consolidated Library of Cooking and Household Receipts. More than 5,000 practical recipes are contained in its five volumes, suggestions of the greatest importance to every housekeeper are found here by the hundred; all of them have been tried and proven themselves to be of the greatest help and to lighten the work of the housekeeper. Many of our subscribers have taken advantage of our special price offer, and already more than one-half of our entire allotment has been placed. Inquiries for the work have come in more rapidly than we could handle them. After our present allotment has been exhausted we shall not be able to furnish the books at the same low price. The publishers themselves will take control of the sale and the price of the books will be advanced considerably. If you care to secure a set of this work at our present very low price you must act quickly. By paying a few cents a day now, you can become the owner of the books at once, and in the course of a month or two will save you their cost. Send coupon today. SEE COUPON AT BOTTOM OF THIS PAGE.

"DENVER A MILE HIGH AND IN THE SHADOW OF THE ROCKIES"

Denver, May 29.—Special—In view of the fact that the attention of all Democrats is attracted toward Denver for the reason that the next national convention of the party will be held in this city, in July, it is not out of place in the interest of general information to present some important facts about the enterprising western city which secured the convention after a hard fight in which prejudice perhaps was the hardest obstacle to overcome. The idea of holding a convention

House-keepers—Attention

Owing to the present stringent times in money matters, many manufacturers and dealers in order to realize ready cash quickly, are selling their wares at less than cost, because they have obligations to meet which must be met, or it may mean failure altogether. THE BLUEFIELD DAILY LEADER, has by special arrangement, secured the distribution of a limited number of sets of the greatest household reference library ever published. These while they last will be distributed at a ridiculous small price. The following are a few of the items contained in the library: Under the title "The Modern Hostess," we read all about dinners, parties, etc. How to properly give or attend them. Under the title of "The Cooking School," we are not only shown how to prepare the meals, etc., we are also taught how to purchase the various meats, poultry, fish, vegetables etc., and how to tell whether they are good or bad, besides the best season of the year for each and in which to use them is indicated. Under the title of soups, chowders and fish meats, poultry and game, more than 2,000 practical of one of the big political parties of the nation in a city of the Far West thought ridiculous by many, not on account of any particular prejudice against Denver as a city, but because of a sectional prejudice, natural, of course, when one considers the elements of human nature. The idea that a western city could handle an event of such national importance seemed absurd to men who were not familiar with Denver and her many advantages as a convention city. However, there were men on the Democratic National Committee, who knew Denver and who had confidence in this city's ability to "make good," and Denver won. Now that the convention is assured, it might be well to consider Denver in detail, to ascertain whether this city's claims as a convention city are well founded. In the first place the people of Denver are used to conventions and large crowds, and Denver wants all of the national conventions that can be secured. The desire for conventions, then, assures the visitor of fair treatment. Fair treatment means good hotel accommodations at reasonable rates and hospitality to strangers while they are within the gates of the city. If visitors are not treated fairly, Denver must be the worst sufferer. It follows, then, that visitors to Denver during the Democratic convention will have all the best of it to start with, and the good people of Denver hope the visitors will have all the best of it at the finish. Denver is the commercial center of the Great Rocky Mountain region. The city is situated on the plains fourteen miles east of the mountains. The country in the immediate vicinity of Denver and to the north, east and south is devoted to agriculture. To the north is the largest irrigated farming district in the world embracing 957,000 acres. To the east is the "dry-farming" belt. Most of the land around Denver is "under irrigation." To the west is the mammoth mountain barrier, which contains the wonderful scenic attractions of Colorado, and which is a vast treasure house of precious metals. Colorado's capital has a population of 200,000. It is a busy, enterprising city that is pushing forward in a commercial way as fast as the development of the agricultural and mining sections of the state will permit. The romance of the "wild and woolly" days is gone, but the romance of the mountains remains, and the climate is superb. Every street and avenue of Denver is a vista to the snow-capped mountain range, and the atmosphere is saturated with a tonic ozone that is soothing to tired nerves, and that puts new red corpuscles in blood that has become depleted by overwork and too close application to business in the humid sections of other parts of the country. Denver is situated fortunately, that is all, and her people, although they are engaged in the heroic work of building up a new country, have taken advantage of location
