"MOTHER" JONES IS HEARD FROM AGAIN

This Time Aged Agitator Raises His Voice against Woman Suffrage.

CHARLESTON, June 13.—That Mother Jones, the aged woman who has been in every mining section of the county championing the cause of the laborer, and whose voice has been heard by every miner who has had any considerable experience in digging black diamonds from the bowels of the earth, is not in favor of extending the right to vote to women, was made clear in an interview she had with a representative of the press yesterday. Without asking the question it might be supposed that this white-haired woman, now past the four score mark, and who has devoted her life's work, as she believes, in trying to better the conditions of the laborers, would be one of the first women in the country to say, "Give to the women of the land the right to vote," as a solution to better conditions, socially and industrially.

On the contrary the reverse is true. Mention this question to her and she will be on her feet in an instant, telling you that the place for the woman is in the home, making the sun shine there for the husband and the children, giving this and that her soft touch, teaching and demonstrating that peace on earth is possible through teaching the culture and refinement of the home.

"The criminal class of the world today is the young class," said the aged woman, "and it's due to the cold, calculating woman in the home. Women seem to have lost that welcoming spirit that makes the home so rich in all that is good. When a stranger knocks at the door these days, and it is opened by someone from inside, you seldom find that smile you used to see, whether it is the woman of the house or a child, that greets you. You see before you the cold, calculating persons, I have just referred to."

Women vote! They remind me of a lot of cats. Have they better conditions where they do vote? I have seen them in conventions, when they ought to have been home spreading rays of sunshine."

area of the state, had to be stricken out. The Kanawha river bed, he contended, formerly ran along the extreme northern end of the city of Charleston, and along down through the Teays valley toward what is now the Ohio river. At that time, Dr. White contended there was no Ohio river, but that what is known as the Kanawha emptied into the lakes, the Ohio river being due to the blocking of great quantities of ice, which dug out a channel that became the Ohio river, the obliteration of the Ohio channel, and the connecting of the Kanawha with the Ohio at Pt. Pleasant.

Dr. White expressed the belief that Charleston was in the center of the greatest oil and gas field in the world. He pointed out that the territory was surrounded by coal fields, that oil had been discovered on every side of the city, and that therefore gas most existed beyond the boundaries of the oil. He pleaded with the coal men, the citizens of Charleston and those interested in the state and its citizens deriving some of the benefits, that they do something to conserve the natural resources within the state; that the city of Charleston should immediately get possession of the great gas field surrounding the city and divert it for use in manufacturing that would come to this section. With these industries, he contended, would come the demand for coal also, which would mean additional profits for coal men, and aid in building great cities where the fuel is found.

Dr. White also brought out the fact that the deepest well was in Kanawha county, now a mile deep, and will be drilled deeper. It is being drilled by Col. William Seymour Edwards and a study of every stratum will be made by geologists. It was also brought out that the first wells were drilled near the city of Charleston, and the first casing was invented in this city—at that time but a village.

That the gas men are the enemies of the coal men was challenged by Colonel Fred Paul Grosscup, a gas man. He contended that while gas was taking the place of coal wherever gas could be had, the coal men should feel good over the fact that the industries brought to a community by natural gas, and especially where coal is near at hand, would demand coal when natural gas was gone, and thereby give the coal producers a near at hand market, that would not be possible had the gas not brought the industries to the community. He pleaded with the coal men to assist in conserving the coal and gas, and thus bring industries to West Virginia, as is being done in the Birmingham district of Alabama; that instead of paying a large sum to the railroads for hauling the fuel out of the state, they would be paying the railroad companies for switching charges. State Geologist White's statement that he believed Charleston was in the center of the greatest gas field in the world, and his reasons for that belief, were received with great enthusiasm by the banquetters that filled the big banquet room of the Hotel Kanawha.

In Great Abundance at Char-
the Institute.

CHARLESTON, June 13.—In his speech at the banquet given in this city last Friday night to the West Virginia Coal Mining Institute, Dr. I. C. White, state geologist, opened the eyes of his hearers by some of the statements made. Dr. White spoke especially along the line of oil and gas, and continued his plea begun many years ago, for a conservation of the natural gas. He said there was no question that he and other geologists had made a mistake when at first they thought the Kanawha river valley between Charleston and Point Pleasant was underlaid with a great coal bed; that when this was discovered not to be true a great area, counted in the coal
