

EDUCATION NOTES

Cooking is one of the subjects taught Alaskan natives in the government schools administered by the United States Bureau of Education. Among the dishes to which the pupils are introduced is doughnuts, which they are taught to fry with seal oil as a substitute for lard.

A bill pending in the New Jersey legislature provides tuition for the higher education of the blind.

"There is a feeling of unrest throughout the country as regards the teaching of algebra," the United States Bureau of Education notes in a recent bulletin, "and eagerness is shown to make the subject more significant than it has yet been in secondary instruction."

The high school at Manatee, Fla., needed an industrial building, and as no funds were available for the purpose, the school children built it themselves. It is a one story structure, built of concrete blocks, twenty-five feet by fifty feet. The blocks were made by the grammar-school pupils; the high-school boys put up the walls and roof, and the girls nailed on the paths for the plastering. The school is called the Kendall Industrial Institute, in honor of the high-school principal, who designed and supervised the work.

A study of the hygiene and sanitation of the Hamburg public schools includes the testing of air before, during and after cleaning the classrooms, as well as the determination of dust and germs at various levels.

Although still fighting for the possession of Tripoli the Italians have already laid the foundation for a system of public instruction in that country.

Every year since 1905 the classes in which Latin is taught have gained in relative numbers in the institutions of higher education in France.

Kentucky has a law passed in the last legislature, permitting the use of schoolhouses as places of worship during vacation.

Fully seventy-five percent of the rural school-teachers in South Carolina last year were teaching for the first time in the positions that they then held, according to information received by the United States Bureau of Education.

Cultural ties are to re-enforce the political alliance between France and Russia, it is hoped, by the establishment of the French Institute of St. Petersburg, recently opened at the Russian capital under the auspices of the university faculties of Northern France. The aim of the institute is to bring about an interchange of the knowledge of each country's language, literature, history and art.

That certain hospitals which train young women to be nurses frequently subject the pupil to forms of commercial exploitation, is a statement made in a recent bulletin issued for free distribution by the United States Bureau of Education.

watched. At the instance of Governor Glasscock several officers of the state militia have been detailed to make frequent visits to all points along the creek, extending over the entire length—some fifteen or eighteen miles. Mother Jones has been conferring with the mine leaders here but the conclusions arrived at at these conferences have not been given out. It is believed the miners will take a definite stand when an effort is made to eject them from their houses on June 20. The second notice of thirty days each will have expired on that date. Of course those that have returned to work and others who are expected to return to work in the meantime will not be disturbed. The various companies desire to operate their mines, and they contend a large number of men want to work but are prevented from doing so by some of the leaders.

C. L. Barlow, of Buckhannon, is transacting business here.
