YALE'S INDUSTRIES.

THE YALE FLAX MILLS.

A Model and Successful Business Enterprise.

ORGANIZATION.

The Yale branch of this valuable enterprise is but one of several conducted by James Livingston & Company in this State and in various places in Canada.

The business was organized at this point in 1887 and has been continuously and successfully managed by those in charge since that date.

The new branch at Fargo was organized by the same company during the present season, and is conducted by the same management—a fact that makes its success assured.

SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.
Doubtless few of the EXPOSITOR'S numerous readers realize the extent and value of this institution to the village and surrounding communities. During the present season the Yale mill has afforded employment for 45 hands during the summer and 23 during the winter; while the Fargo branch will employ about 40 in summer and 17 during the winter season.

Its use to the neighboring farmers is indicated by the fact that the Yale branch consumes the products of 90 acres of land that are annually sown to flax, and the Fargo mill will use fully 400 acres more, making a total of 1,000 acres of land annually used and the products brought directly to these places.

THE PAY ROLL.
Although the present season has been unusually severe upon this as well as all other products of the farm the value of this business as a means of distributing money throughout the village and surrounding communities is fully shown by the fact that the company have, so far during the present season, paid out money as follows:

Yale Mill, to farmers,	$6,440.
" for labor, etc.,	$8,444.
Fargo Mill, to farmers,	$3,946.
" for labor, etc.,	$2,160.
Total,	$20,990.

THE PRODUCT.
Before the product of the mill reaches the consumer it passes through many hands and processes and it is surprising that the finished article can be obtained at such reasonable prices as they are sold at. In addition to the plying, sowing, and cultivation of the soil, the flax must be carefully pulled, bound, and cured; then spread out over acres of territory and again turned, bound, and taken back to the mill for threshing, hacking, etc.

The hacked flax is used in weaving linen goods and for carpet warp. The tow made from the same is spun into shoe-thread, sail twine, and many other articles which require a strong, enduring fiber. The green tow is much used for upholstering purposes, and the coarsest tow for manufacturing strong paper, rope, etc. Thus it will be seen that the green flax that is seen growing by the road-side passes through the various processes employed in the business until nearly every particle is manufactured into articles that are wonderfully beautiful and useful.

The products referred to are shipped direct to New York, Boston, Detroit, Chicago and many other important cities throughout the Union where factories are located.

THE MANAGEMENT.
James McCall, the active member of the firm at this place and Fargo, has been closely identified with the business from its beginning. Every department undergoes his careful inspection. There is nothing out of place around the institution. Every farm, place, or building that comes into use in connection with the business immediately undergoes a change for the better, so that, taken as a whole, the success of this valuable enterprise is a marked illustration of the fact that integrity, energy, thrift, and "stick-to-it-iveness" will make any legitimate business enterprise a success.
