

25 More Days

Gosh, ain't it a long time to wait? Do you remember when you thought that? Your children think that now, but you and I know it is a very short time to make our plans that each name on our list receive the thought and attention it should have that when we do our shopping we can do so with some intelligence.

One hundred cents will buy around a dollar's worth and no more. Will you make yours count, or are you one of those afflicted with procrastinitis. Remember, the longer you put off buying the less buying power your dollar has, for the best trades invariably go first. Wait, don't stop now. What I want to tell you won't cost you a cent. It is this:

We sell giveable gifts for Dad or for Brother (it makes no difference whether he be yours or someone else) for Uncle John, for Gramp, in fact for every him in the family. Furthermore, we are glad to have you call in and look around; glad to have you take goods home for inspection; perfectly willing to exchange anything bought here, or refund your money, and will sell real merchandise at as fair a price as it can be bought anywhere.

Pillsbury entertained the members of the Auction club, Friday evening, at the former's home. A buffet supper was served at 7 o'clock, followed by auction, four tables being filled. A large crowd gathered in the Armory Friday evening to cheer for the home High school boys in their first basket ball game of the season when they won from the Brooks High school boys in a score of 40 to 17. The visitors played at a disadvantage as the local boys had been practicing for some time under amateur rules and in the Armory. The summary with Norton as referee: BELFAST. Eighty little folks gathered at 1 p. m. and with the evangelist engaged in a varied program of games, and contests until 5 o'clock. Ice cream was served by Mr. Roscoe Arey in person to all the little folks and at the close of the afternoon the long looked for prizes were awarded. These were given to those securing the greatest number of punches in the ticket issued to all at the opening of the contest; punches being obtained by attendance at the meetings and by securing other people to attend. Leroy Green left last Saturday night for Brockton, Mass., where he has a fine position with the Walkover Shoe factory. He has also been engaged as cornet soloist in the Walkover Band, a fine aggregation of musicians. Belfast regrets to lose Mr. Green as he has been very popular in church orchestras, concert programs and but recently began the instruction of the High school orchestra concert programs. His family will remain here for the present. Memorial building never presented a neater appearance externally than it does now. The work of repairing the roof and other wood work finishing was done by George O. Dunbar, Belfast's steeple jack, assisted by his son, Wellington E. Dunbar. He did not use a single staging or ladder, but clung to some of the most dangerous parts and used a boatswain's chair on the others. The cupolas are handsome with soft shades of brown and green. The old historic Knox eagle, the gift many years ago of the Belfast Journal, that ornaments the front over the main entrance, was painted by Lloyd D. McKeen.

Within a few days one of the historic wooden buildings on old Fort Sullivan, Eastport, built nearly 116 years ago by the U. S. government will be removed, as workmen are now tearing down the structure and the collection of lumber will be used for fuel, as in recent years when it became unsafe and was looked upon as a firetrap by the city officials, who ordered it removed. Built originally in 1807, and first occupied by United States troops the following year and up to 1875 when the fort was disbanded as worthless when the soldiers were sent to Western camps, the land and buildings were sold at public auction 40 years ago and since that time these old buildings have been used by private families of the poorer class. Late in the war of 1812, a British fleet arrived in Eastport harbor from Halifax and without firing a shot or injuring a person took possession of old Fort Sullivan on the far east Maine border which they held nearly two years while the two big countries were settling the exact boundary line, and then the English soldiers sailed away never to return. The United States troops soon returned to the fort and remained there until 1875

COW VALUES.
The noted Chicago lawyer, Emory Storr, attended a banquet of stockbreeders in the old Leland Hotel some thirty years ago. Called upon to speak, he said: "Gentlemen, I have listened with great interest to the meric and good qualities of the Jersey, Holstein, and other fine breeds of cattle, but as an attorney for railroads I can assure you the most valuable and highest priced animal in the world is the offspring of an ordinary cow crossed by a locomotive."—Argonaut.
