TRAMMELL THINKS TREATY DEPENDS ON RESERVATIONS

EXPLAINS WHY HE VOTED AGAINST RATIFICATION WITHOUT RESERVATIONS—HE AND MRS. TRAMMELL STOP OVER NIGHT HERE EN ROUTE TO CRESCENT CITY.

Senators and Mrs. Park M. Trammell arrived here yesterday and stopped over night en route to Crescent City to pay a brief visit to relatives of Mrs. Trammell. Senator Trammell will have to be in Washington Monday when Congress meets in regular session.

Senator Trammell came in for considerable criticism as a result of his vote against the unqualified ratification of the treaty.

In explaining his vote on the final effort at ratification without reservation Senator Trammell said that every few members of the Senate were in favor of ratifying without some reservation.

"The principle object in making these reservations," said Senator Trammell, "was to make plain the intention of the United States that this government retained exclusive control over its domestic problems, such as immigration, the tariff, coastwise traffic and other internal affairs; the preservation of the Monroe Doctrine, the prohibition against Great Britain controlling with its six votes in any matter in which America was interested; the right of our government to determine whether or not it had performed its obligations if it should decide to withdraw from the League of Nations, and also that the council of the League of Nations should not have the power to direct and require American soldiers to defend the territorial boundaries and political integrity of other nations except when the same was authorized by congress. I had voted along with a large majority of my democratic associates for these reservations to be embraced in the resolution of ratification and had done so because I believe in making plain the United States' interpretation of the clauses of the League of Nations touching upon these questions. The same views were entertained by a large majority of both democrats and republicans of the senate. These interpretations were in line with the construction placed upon the sections involved by the President. Whether or not the foreign members of the council of the League of Nations would have placed the same construction upon them is in my mind very doubtful and I thought the safest policy to protect the interest of our own country was to specify in the resolution of ratification the construction we placed upon these sections of the League of Nations which are of such vital interest to America. Neither Mr. Underwood or any one who supported his resolution had the least hope of it being adopted but merely desired an expression to give the President the opportunity to state to the other powers that he American senate would not ratify the treaty without at least placing in the resolution of ratification certain interpretative reservations. I remained true to my convictions and voted against the resolution because I honestly believed that the interpretative reservations should be inserted in the resolution of ratification. The President has often been quoted as stating that he did not object to certain reservations.

"I am most earnestly in favor of the League of Nations as contemplated by this treaty and by vote after vote have shown that I desired such league but my strong sentiment for this world movement for disarmament and peace only intensifies my determination to make plain and clarify certain covenants of the League of Nations which if not defined and interpreted according to our understanding in our resolution of ratification may bring confusion and conflict to the United States in the future. We must bear in mind that the United States would have no vote in the league upon any matter in which our republic is in dispute, therefore, unless we make plain our interpretation of certain clauses of this covenant foreigners on the council would rule supreme when America's interest may be involved in direct dispute. Our nation would be without any voting strength upon what America construed the covenant to mean under which we were being tried upon a dispute with another nation."

Here is a perfect gem of misapprehension from a woman answering an advertisement for a French governess "au pair." "I know a little English, and could give easy at once, lessons in French, for which I will be nourished, lying down, and bleached, who, I think, are the conditions 'au pair.'"—Boston Transcript.

Delbrook was the proud possessor of a brand-new suit of clothes with a small wooden whistle attached to it. Soon after getting the suit, and while the family was dining away from home, his father asked him why he did not wear his new suit that evening. "I can't, daddy," he answered, "because the whistle's broke."
