In mining days wrongs were righted by individual prowess. The ready six shooter was often the instrument of justice, and harsh judgments were rendered which could not be reversed, by any earthly court. In Boise basin rufianism reigned with terror for a season. Peaceable men were driven from their claims by the organized toughs of the camp. A woman who was noted more for her nerve than for her refinement, claimed a rich piece of ground, in the best part of the camp, but it was apparently abandoned for a while. Some of the rough element among the men decided to jump the claim and put a force of men to work at washing out the gold. The female owner heard that her claim was jumped. She repaired to the scene armed with a pick handle. She jumped into the cut and began to belay the shovelers, knocking them down as she reached them. The man who had jumped the claim was a gun fighter and he tried to bluff the woman with the pick handle, but he was laid low with the rude weapon. The battle was won. The woman with the pick handle had won her case and the judgment was recorded in the sentiments of the people; and that judgment was never reversed.

An old man remarked the other day that the bravest deed of the Nez Perces war was performed by a prominent citizen of Idaho county, who is now deceased. This brave man, from a camp with soldiers and volunteers around him, observed that an Indian warrior in ambush was holding a scouting party at bay and in danger of losing their lives. The Indian was concealed but he was doing some bad shooting every time a white man exposed a vital point of his body. The citizen was thoroughly posted upon the topography of the immediate vicinity of the ambush and knew that he could approach the Indian from the opposite side within short gunshot range. He, therefore, took a double-barrel shotgun loaded with buckshot, and went to relieve his friends. He approached within thirty yards of the savage boldly raised up to his full height and fired at the enemy. The Indian turned in fury and did not fall. The citizen fired the second barrel and still the Indian charged upon him trying to fire his deadly rifle. The brave white man and the blood-thirsty savage approached to a deadly conflict. The white man clubbed his gun, while the Indian tried to fire. One blow hurled the red man to the ground. The shot had failed to do their work of death, but they had disabled the rifle. The Indian's body was riddled, but his desperation kept him alive long enough to have killed his assailant if his gun had not failed to fire.

Mr. Adams' Visit.

The party of capitalists from Boston, consisting of Charles Francis Adams and his friends, who are so largely interested in the development of this section of country, arrived in the city Monday afternoon by boat. They visited the Hill and all interesting points in the Clearwater valley as far as Mr. Porter's fruit farm on the south side of the river and on the north side to the property owned by the Adams syndicate. After returning to the city a reception was held in the parlors of the Grostein residence where a few representative citizens were invited. Mr. Adams who was the spokesman of the party first made many inquiries about the progress in fruit growing, farming and mining since his former visit six years ago. The speaker had accurate knowledge of the country and the business affairs as they existed at the time of his former visit and noted the progress made with accuracy. He asked about the recent development in the mountain mining camps and the prospect for future business relations with the various districts.

Mr. Adams in answer to some inquiry about rail road extension, expressed the opinion that our hope was from the extension of the N. P. This would be done as soon as the tide turned in financial affairs. With one road extended to this city others would follow. The O. R. & N. now hold the trade by river route but that would be inadequate in the near future. Lewiston should expect great advantage from the reorganization of railroad business which the signs of the times indicate will soon occur. The needs of this place would be met by an extensive local system independent of any through system, which made local freight pay for carrying through freight. Lewiston, Mr. Adams thinks, is fortunately located at the gateway to a great country and must some day be an important railroad center of a grand local system, tapping the basin of the Snake which extends from Utah on the south and the Coeur d'Alenes on the north.

Mr. Adams did not profess to have any inside information about railroad affairs, for he has been out of the business for six years, but he generalized from the standpoint of a business man only. He said the next turn of the tide was sure to put us on the road to great prosperity. His glowing hopes should inspire courage and the fact that he is still investing large sums of money in Lewiston enterprises is positive evidence of his sincerity. He is a sagacious business man and as an outside investor his idea of our future is worthy of consideration.

F. P. Hannaford, the genial boomer of the Denver towns site syndicate, will open a general merchandise store in Florence at an early date.

M. L. Murray arrived from Florence last Friday and went to Lewiston Monday. He says Florence is the greatest and best poor man's camp in the northwest.

George Sears is a very sick man with dropsy and a general breaking down of the system at Mt. Idaho, and the death of this old pioneer may be looked for at any hour.

At the present writing there are about five feet of snow in the mountains. Much of this is fresh light snow which will run off in a day or two of warm sunshine. But under this is a layer of old snow which thawed and froze in the warm weather of last fall until it is now a solid cake of ice one foot thick. This crust on the bosom of mother earth will melt more slowly and will thus serve to prolong the season for placer mining. The last two years have been noted for a short water supply and the present outlook is the best in a long time.

A correspondent from Florence writes: "The Banner mine, one of the best producers in Florence has a shaft 60 feet deep to the ledge, which is 14 feet wide between walls, with two veins that measure from 10 to 18 inches in width, increasing in width as the shaft goes down. Some of the ore on the dump is said to assay $347 per ton. The Coupon has a shaft down 60 feet and the ore from the ledge is said to yield $100 per ton. The Gold Bug is between 60 and 70 feet deep and its ore is of decomposed quartz, which makes it one of the easiest working and best paying propositions in the camp. With the use of rockers the owners are receiving $23 per ton, with valuable milling ore left. The Josephine is 25 feet deep, and its ledge measures eight feet wide and assays over $100 per ton. The Hi Yu shows a rich grade of ore and is being developed rapidly. The Healy creek district, which is separated from the Florence district by a divide, has a number of claims which are making excellent showings. The Arnie mine is down 62 feet, the ledge measuring three feet in width. The Poor-man has more work done on it than any other mine in the camp and has a fine large body of ore in sight. A tunnel about 350 feet long has been made, the ore assaying, it is said, up in the hundreds. They have over 200 tons of ore on the dump and expect to put on a stamp mill this season."
