

ENGINES OF DEATH

Weapons of the World War and Weapons of the Next War Pictured in Contrast

An unwieldy, ineffectual weapon was this World War tank.

Powerful modern tanks of the Soviet army.

Outstanding in the amazing advance achieved in the technique of warfare since the guns were stilled on Armistice Day, 1918, is the improvement in tanks. At the left is shown a German tank used in the last year of the conflict, a square-ended, clumsy monster of little speed, which, like most of the kaiser's tanks, was an ineffective weapon. At the right is shown a modern fleet speeding over a Russian highway, part of the powerful tank arm of the Soviet military establishment. Speed of tanks has been increased more than tenfold in the last 17 years, from four to six miles an hour to 50 and 60. The most advanced tanks in the U. S. army have attained this speed on their own tracks. The huge, unwieldy apparitions of 1918 have been abandoned, medium and baby tanks that can operate over the most difficult terrain taking their place, and the value of the lighter types has been strikingly demonstrated in the Italian advance into Ethiopia. In the fleets of all the major powers are many one and two-man machines, while others carry crews of four to six within their steel walls.

No limit has been placed on the number of new players reporting for the committee is prepared if necessary to formulate new teams if the situation warrants such action.

LOCAL RESIDENCES REPORTED ENTERED

Two local homes were entered over the week-end. It was reported today by Chief Inspector William P. Keegan of the detective bureau. In one burglary a watch was stolen, while the other break was unsuccessful.

A gold watch was stolen from the home of Mrs. George Jackson, 11 Coe street, after the premises had been entered Saturday night. Burglars broke into the home of Anthony Pepe, 1043 North Main street, also Saturday night. Nothing was reported taken.
