CHARGES HIM

Anthress Accuses Husband of Blackmail and Forgery

Alice Rollins Crane that was, Countess Moraczewski that she thought herself to be, Mrs. Victor Moraczewski, wife of a Polish peasant, as she really is, has sworn to a complaint charging her husband with robbery and blackmail. She herself awaiting the action of a grand jury at Nome for attempting to murder Capt. William Galpin, an ex-newspaper man and a Klondike mining operator.

It is said the trials of the Moraczewskis, which will take place at Dawson, will be very sensational.

Alice Rollins Crane is an authoress of some note, and last summer Capt. Galpin and "Count" Moraczewski were rivals for her hand. It is said that she hesitated a long time between the gallant ex-army officer and the supposed Russian noble, but finally the title won, and the fair Alice and her noble spouse started down the Yukon together—but this was not until after the termination of some litigation in which she and her two lovers were mixed up.

Galpin followed the couple down the river, and they met at the Russian mission. It is there, that Galpin says, the bride and groom robbed him and attempted to murder him. And it was there that Alice discovered that her count was only a poor Polish mechanic, who had been masquerading.

RECORD OF THE PAST

No Stronger Evidence Can Be Had

Look well to their record. What they have done many times in years gone by is the best guarantee of future results. Anyone with a back; any reader suffering from urinary troubles, from any kidney ills, will find in the following evidence proof that relief and cure is near at hand:

James L. Scanlon, street car conductor in the employ of the Seattle Electric Co., of 1610 Vesler way, Seattle, Wash., says: "At intervals for over three years I have been annoyed with troubles from the kidneys, and suffered from severe pain in the small of my back. I railroaded for years in the East on the Michigan Southern R. R., running between Detroit and Toledo, and since coming here six years ago I have been in the employ of the Seattle Electric Co. If the constant skaking and jarring of the cars did not bring on the trouble, it probably aggravated it. Be that as it may, during attacks I noticed that I was always worse if I contracted a cold, which settled in my kidneys and often kept me in continual misery. Through a very convincing ad that I saw in one of our Seattle papers I was induced to try Doan's Kidney Pills. When I commenced the treatment I was in such pain across the small of my back every morning when I got out of bed that I could scarcely stand it, and if I stooped or bent unthinkingly I can only describe the twinges as excruciating. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me from the start. To say I endorse the preparation mildly expresses what I think of it."

FOR TEN YEARS

(Copyright, 1903, by C. B. Lewis.)

I was half owner and cashier of a county bank when Mr. John Taylor White came along as a general produce buyer and rented one of the rooms over the bank.

Mr. White was very friendly with me and dattered me so extensively that I wondered what object he had in view. I possessed duplicate keys to all the rooms on the second floor and one day visited Mr. White's room when he wasn't there, and on rolling back the carpet I found a hole in the floor over the vault. As the vault top was protected by railroad iron his attempt had been a failure.

He had replaced the cut floor fairly well and then abandoned the idea for another. What was the other?

The question bothered me not a little for a week. Then I found an answer to it. One day when Mr. White dropped in to see me I looked him over more carefully than I had ever done before. I saw that he was a determined and reckless man who would stop at nothing to carry out a purpose. Failing to get into the vault above or below, wouldn't it be his plan to get possession of the keys of the bank and the vault and thus come at the money? I reasoned that it would, and two incidents that fell under my observation during the next fortnight strengthened my belief.

The first was that Mr. White was cultivating our private watchman and seeking to make himself solid. The second was that I found him skulking about my house at night. I concluded from this latter circumstance that he was planning to pay me a midnight visit to get possession of the keys, and I began making preparations to receive him.

Burglar alarms were unknown in small towns in those days, and windows were secured by driving a nail over the sash. No dwelling house in town was secure enough to keep a burglar out if he wanted to get in. I spent half an hour surveying my house from the outside to decide by which avenue Mr. White would seek to make his entrance. I finally concluded that he would come across the common, climb my back fence and, keeping along under the shadow of a row of fruit trees, reach the west window of the dining room. He could work there unseen, and his chances of getting in were at least as good as anywhere else.

To hurry up his plans a little and have the affair of my hands I invited him to lunch one day. On that day the east dining room window was securely fastened, but the west one was not. We walked in the grounds that he might note the best means of approach, and at lunch I managed to convey the idea that I was a sound sleeper and never feared burglars.

To the best of my knowledge and belief, Mr. White was well pleased with the outlook—well pleased. He saw his way clear to accomplish a certain object, and after he had departed I got down the family album to consult the record. I deduced from it that I might expect a visitor about the third night, and I therefore began to prepare for him. Neither my wife nor children knew my suspicions or what I had in view, but at 11 o'clock on the third night I was ready and waiting.

Mr. White arrived at a quarter past the hour, seeming to be in a hurry to close up the deal and get out of town. I heard the first noise he made at the window, but my policy was silence. Up went the sash, and in came Mr. White, and I may say that he was considerably surprised at finding his right foot caught fast in a big bear trap before it had touched the floor. The yell he uttered as the trap closed around his ankle proved that he was not altogether imperturbable and also awoke every member of my household.

I had a match ready to light the lamp, and as soon as the room was illuminated I saw the man lying on the floor. I wished him good evening and inquired about the weather outside and asked him if he had dropped anything.

Mr. White was not the gentleman I had supposed him to be. He swore and cursed and called names, and his loud talk kept the baby howling and my wife on the verge of a chill. He had come armed with a big knife, but as he could not get at me this did him no good. He had also taken the trouble to put on false whiskers and an old hat, and I could and did truthfully tell him that they did not add to his personal appearance.

The talk I had with Mr. White lasted about an hour—that is, he did most of the talking, and his conversation was all in English and of the most vigorous kind. When he wasn't speaking and I wasn't running upstairs to assure my wife that things were all right I got off a few words of well meant advice. He didn't like it a little bit.

It was very interesting while it lasted, and I made it last a great deal longer than Mr. White cared for. I was selfish enough and mean enough to want revenge for the worry he had caused me, and so I took things easy and let the trap get in its work.

Three months after Mr. White had been released from the trap and taken to jail he was tried, found guilty and sentenced to ten years in state prison. About the last thing he said before his departure from the town was that he would get even with me, but if he has yet served his time and this meets his eye I wish him to know that my bear traps now number half a dozen and that unless he brings a lantern with him on his next visit and rings the front door bell besides I shall not be responsible for damages.

An old fashioned bear trap with teeth on each long beam anything that modern genius can invent for holding down a bad man.
