WATCHMAN SHOT DEAD AT WRANGELL NARROWS

A watchman named Yahr was shot dead by an Indian named Shorty No. 2 at a saltery near Tonka, in Wrangell narrows, last Sunday morning at 3:30 o'clock. The story of the tragedy is told by the wife of the murdered watchman, a bride of a year, who ran for six miles through the wilderness of trees and swamp lands in her bare feet and nightdress and without covering for her head to a point opposite Tonka, from where she attracted the attention of the cannerymen.

Mrs. Yahr tells the story of the murder. Shorty No. 2 and another Indian came to the saltery where lived Yahr, both in liquor. They wanted more liquor. Yahr was accustomed to selling it to Indians. They got it, and were finally put to bed up stairs in the loft. At about 3 o'clock in the morning they quarrelled and began fighting.

Yahr went up stairs and put Shorty out of the house. The latter went down to his boat, got his rifle, returned and shot Yahr in the forehead, killing him instantly. He then went in the bedroom searching for Mrs. Yahr. She was under the bed, but had previously left the window open. Shorty thinking she had escaped went outside, she then got out through the window and without clothing made into the night.

Marshal Grant was at Tonka, and with a posse, he went to the scene of the tragedy. The two Indians were found in hiding on an island seven miles away.

Mrs. Yahr and the murderer came to Juneau on the Dirigo. The corpse was taken to Wrangell.

The dead man and his wife were from Tacoma.

TOGO'S ATTACK FAILS

The Japanese fleet does not succeed in closing Port Arthur or in inflicting material injury to Russian ships or forts

[Special Dispatch to Daily Alaskan.]

St. Petersburg, May 5—The attack of Admiral Togo, with the Japanese fleet, upon the Russian ships and land fortifications at Port Arthur resulted in a complete failure to seal the entrance to the harbor, and no material damage was inflicted upon either ships or forts.

RUSSIANS HAVE RECOVERED FROM SHOCK

St. Petersburg, May 5—The gloom which prevailed yesterday was almost completely dispelled this morning when the people read the story of the glorious fight made by General Sassulitch's handful of rough regiments against the flower of the mikado's legions at Yalu river and the later defeat of Togo's attempt to seal the entrance to Port Arthur.

It is now plain that not more than 8,000 Russians were actually engaged at Yalu against a Japanese army of 30,000. The losses on both sides are expected to reach 1,200 Russians and twice that many Japanese.
