ROOSEVELT IN COMMAND

Never in the history of the United States has a man assumed control of a political party more completely than has President Roosevelt taken possession of the republican party at the present time, and never was there a smaller or more select political cabinet chosen to advise a political leader than the coterie of men who are being almost daily consulted by the remarkable man who occupies the White House.

We are told one day that President Roosevelt has selected one of his secretaries to be chairman of the republican national committee, and the next we are told that the chief executive is at work upon the republican platform. He some time ago selected the man to place his name in nomination before the national convention, whom he had reported to the White House where he told him what he wanted said in the speech. The president's interview with Ex-Gov. Black, who is to make the nominating speech, terminated with the agreement that a completed draft of the speech would be submitted to the president a sufficient time before its delivery to permit the latter to make any desired alterations in it. In the meantime politicians are awaiting with not a little interest the final announcement by Mr. Roosevelt of the name of him whom he desires to be his running mate.

In all this work, the president's advisers are confined to Ex-Secretary Root, Senator Lodge and Postmaster General Payne, with one or two other cabinet members occasionally permitted to be present at an interview.

Well, there is no reason why it should not be thus. As Henry Watterman recently said, no matter what the platforms of the two political parties for the coming campaign might be, the issue will be Roosevelt. Roosevelt is the republican platform, and he will so remain, no matter what plans might be written into the report of the committee on resolutions which will be named by the Chicago convention. It being conceded that the great political duel is to be fought by Roosevelt on the one side and those opposed to Roosevelt on the other, it is but fair that the rough-riding president should be permitted to choose his weapons, his seconds and his aides.

In speaking of the late republican convention at Juneau, John G. Heid says:

"We had a big majority of the delegates in the convention and would have had the support of those who were unable to reach the convention. Ours is the regularly elected delegation and will certainly be so recognized."

If Mr. Heid desires to be governor of Alaska the less he says of the late republican convention the better it will be for him.

An Everett girl has advertised for a husband through an employment agency, but has thus far not secured an answer that the agency deems worthy of submitting to her. The Daily Alaskan suggests to the Everett damsel and all her friends that its advertising rates are reasonable and guaranteed to bring results. Just try the columns of this paper, Miss Everett.

The fact that Senator Tillman is a supporter of Judge Parker for the democratic presidential nomination indicates that the New Yorker is not opposed to the "gold democracy," so-called, for his backing.

Several Alaskan towns have already taken up the matter of celebrating the Fourth of July. It might not be out of place to say that Skagway is going to celebrate that day in due form.
