The A. B. C. of Finance. CAN RESUMPTION BE MAINTAINED?
The notes of the United States are as good as gold; can they be kept so? Those who say that resumption was not possible, now say that it will fail. With strange faith in human folly, they ask men to believe that all the bills which were to flow from resumption are yet to come from its failure. But what is this which is to fail? It is the payment of all notes that are offered for payment. As long as that goes on, those notes which men do not offer, but choose to hold, will be as good as gold. Thus far, few holders offer the notes, and the means of the government grow larger. Before payment can fail, there must first be a great change in the minds of men as to the holding and use of the notes, and next a great exhaustion of the means which the government holds. Before sensible men believe that the Mississippi is going to run dry, they must know something of the failure of the rains and springs which have kept it full enough to float many vessels. Silver coins, and doubts about their effect, will be spoken of hereafter, and it will be seen that the Treasury has full power to avoid any danger that can come from that quarter. The present question is simple: Can the Treasury continue to get gold enough to pay every note for which the holder may ask? The Treasury is like a lake in a deep valley, to which waters from a thousand springs flow because they can go nowhere else. The mines pour out millions of gold each year. According to Wells, Fargo & Co., who move nearly all the gold that is produced, $37,672,480 was the yield of that metal in 1878. Less than $1,000,000 yearly finds use in the arts and for ornament. The loss and wear are insignificant, because so little gold is in daily handling. The Pacific States and Territories have more than they can use; these are ponds that are always full to the brim. Somewhere the gold must go to get used. All that flows to the east must go (1) into the hands of the people, or (2) into private hands, or (3) into the hands of the Treasury, or (4) into the hands of the National character, and such traits last long. The people are too practical to hide many talents in a napkin. Their long familiarity with banks, savings-banks and other places of deposit and loan has formed fixed habits. The banks themselves will not take the risk of holding, and the cost of guarding and moving specie, so long as they can keep in place of it notes on which the gold can be drawn at will. This has been proved this year, to the surprise of many who had expected a great drain of gold from the Treasury by the banks. But they have put their gold into the Treasury, and taken out large notes instead. Under the law they can use the notes in place of gold; can pay their own notes with United States notes; and can receive of the bank in exchange for any note special certificates are paid in coin only. All who want gold can get it from the Government, and the banks save themselves the risk and cost of keeping it by making the Treasury their storehouse. So long as exports of goods greatly exceed imports, gold does not go abroad. The goods sold by us more than pay for the goods bought by us, so that, if gold goes either way, it must come to us in payment. The excess of goods sold was $264,656,602 during the year just closed, which far exceeds any other year for interest, for freights, or spent abroad by trade. Interest due abroad on the public debt has been cut down to less than $10,000,000 yearly; interest on the other debt has been greatly reduced, and a larger amount of foreign capital is invested here each year, when the people pay their debts and the land prospers. We sell more than we buy abroad, because the cost of raising wheat and corn, cotton and tobacco, and of producing cattle, provisions and petroleum, is lower here than in other countries. A change in the relative cost of producing such staples in different countries cannot be quickly made; so great a change as to overcome the vast excess of exports can hardly occur for many years. Gold has no other outlet, then, and runs into the Treasury just as water from rains and springs gathers in a closed lake. There is no other place in the country where it can be kept in large amount, without cost or risk to the owner, and yet be used by him at will in the form of notes. He who holds a note owns part of the reserve in the Treasury; can use it any day at will; and yet has no risk, in guarding or hiding it. Hence a great number of such notes will at all times be used so long as the law permits, and would be used if the notes were not a legal tender. People need them, and would pass them and take them, just as they need and use receipts for wheat in a warehouse. There is no reason to believe that any smaller amount of notes would now be wanted if they were not legal tender, nor is there any reason to believe that the amount needed and kept in use will grow smaller as long as the Treasury keeps faith with the people. The means of the Treasury for paying notes offered have increased in the six months since resumption began, and still increase. It had then, and has now, a larger ratio of cash in hand to notes than the Bank of England does perfectly safe. In strictest theory, the cash should be retained, unless they note remaining in the United States hold gold, which they choose not to do. Virtually, the Treasury has a growing stock of over $150,000,000 in specie to protect about $200,000,000 in notes not now in the Treasury not required by the banks. But if at any time it should need more gold, it has power in the resumption act to borrow any needed sum. The actual sale of more than $200,000,000 of four per cent. bonds within the single month of April proves that it can borrow, if need should arise, gold enough to pay every note remaining. But as long as it keeps faith, it will have no cause to borrow. The people will not fail to pay their notes unless they are false to themselves. If a party hostile to the public faith should gain control of the Treasury, the holders might then want gold in place of notes. The danger would come, not in a naked proposal to repudiate, but in some scheme to stop redemption of notes, or to cut down revenues below the necessities of the government so that its cash should be exhausted, unless they such change in the state of foreign trade that imports should exceed exports, or to pay out for claims or public works more money than comes in through taxation. If the Treasury looks—if it passes out more than it takes in—it will be drawn away. All want expenditure means hostility to resumption as well as loss to taxpayers. But against that danger, the barrier is the honesty and good sense of the people.—New York Tribune.

The Biggest Greenback Lie Yet BREWSTER, Aug. 7. The greenback lecture here last week by Springer and McIntire, two traveling tramps was a complete failure. A small number were present attracted by the report that Major Willett was to introduce the speakers and preside at the meeting. The audience were surprised and disgusted, and even Willett looked blank when the speaker stated that the national debt was nineteen billion of dollars, and the annual interest on the same over two billion.

After a few more statements like this the speaker sat down, overcome by his great exertion. Major Willett then wished to give a few extracts from his famous speech at Augusta, but was choked off before he had even a chance to speak. A piece of machine poetry was then recited, after which a collection was taken to defray expenses, at which we are reliably informed, thirty-five cents was secured. Brunswick threw seventeen greenback votes last year, but it is not expected by the greenbackers to poll as heavy a vote this year. Sixteen of the greenbackers were formerly democrats and one independent.

To the Editor of the Kennebec Journal: We notice that the Maine Standard of Aug. 8, contains an article saying that your Clinton correspondent lies in stating that there were but 200 people at the greenback rally, addressed by Dr. Lancaster and that other fellow. Now the writer of that report was not "created in the Journal office," but resides in Clinton and attended the meeting in question. Our estimate was made on the judgment of several persons present. We stated there were about 300 persons present, 100 being ladies, and we make no change in these figures.

Mr. Winton, candidate for Senator, says that he wanted to make a statement on the subject believed however, and that there were 600, but "those present say," says the Standard, that there were 1,000. How is that for truth? If Winton is correct then your correspondent can 100 nearer the truth than the selfish liar who writes for a statement on the subject in the Standard. Thus it is plain to see how we "pan out," taking a greenback version of the affair even. M. P. HATCH.

General News. Mr. Chas J. Fisher, of Boston, has been appointed purchasing agent for the Eastern Railroad Company. The cod-fishing business of San Francisco employs thirteen vessels and two hundred and fifty men. There has been little change in the last ten years. The New York Sun, having taken an eye-opener, conceals that, while the democratic party is not reduced to desperate straits, it is suffering under embarrassments. Beneath many a sun-bonnet in the berry pasture there is a bright eye and a rosy, tanned cheek that causes the farmer's boy to drop his ox whip and scale the stone wall, just to "help fill up the basket," that's all.—New Haven Register.

Those Useful Countails. The kidneys and bladder, sometimes become torpid and weak from uncertain causes. When this occurs, their discharging function of necessity very imperfectly performed, and certain debris, which is the result of natural bodily waste and decay, does not escape as it should, but remains to corrupt the blood and develop poisonous humors and dangerous as well as painful diseases. It is one of the best effects of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters to gently stimulate the urinary organs, and prevent them from passing into a state of inactivity, always prevent, or inflammatory degeneration and decay. How much more desirable it is, to check the progress of such dangerous conditions, than to incur the means of their destruction. To expel from the system waste matter through the bowels and kidneys, and to regulate and arouse the stomach and liver, are among the chief uses of this valuable remedy.
