The Hittites must have formed a large army, for they had drawn troops from the whole country, Pantheon. The brigade of Ra-Harmachis was in the center, "and feared not to fight," so they marched right into the ambush on the northwest, which the Chetas had planned. The brigade was beaten back by the enemy-"foot and horse of street car on Sutter street, and had both legs King Rameses gave way before them." Rameses was equal to the occasion. Mounted on his "great horse," called 'Victory in Thebes," he rushed to the front, "he pierced the line of the foe, the vile Cheta; he was all alone, no other with

Well, perhaps not; yet Arabi has had his doings recorded in the present war, and, according to his scribes, he has sunk our ironclads, St. Helena, September 3d.-L. H. Antiv, killed great numbers of our soldiers and sailors, and has our Admiral at this moment safe as a prisoner in Cairo. In writing istory, the modern Egyptian here bears a ery strong resemblance to the ancient one. It is a very simple case so far as the moral is concerned. It is human nature, like Rameses and Arabi, to desire greatness and glory, and that desire will have a tendency o manifest itself wherever it can manage to do so. Although we are not likely to have such exaggerations as above quoted sent home to us, still there is always the power of telling a story in more ways than ne, and as we at home only wish for the truth, the less our correspondents are tampered with the better.
