TRANSPARENT CONCERN.

Lately the San Francisco Chronicle has been making ostentatious manifestations of usually precede some act of subserviency. The Chronicle is evidently preparing the way for doing just what the corporation may desire in some instance, or of doing the railroad company some signal service, and yet maintaining a reputation for stalwart independence. The most recent complaint of the Chronicle against the railroad company is, in effect, that it has refused to give persons desiring to attend the National Republican Convention at Chicago in June emigrant rates of transportation. It says that the railroad company charges twenty dollars more for excursion rates from San Francisco to Chicago and return than it charges from Chicago to San Francisco and return. It further says that the delegates to the Convention will go, because they promised to, but it will greatly restrict and limit the number of persons who might have gone had greater concessions in the rate of transportation been given. It affords us great pleasure to see that the delegates are so self-sacrificing that they are willing to stand twenty dollars more than the emigrant rate to Chicago and return, because of the promise they have made to a Convention that they will attend the national gathering. We, however, venture the opinion that there is not one single delegate elected to either the Republican or Democratic National Conventions who will not expect free transportation at the hands of the railroad company, and we further suggest that penses of a delegate to a National Convenpaper concerning the cost of transportaanti-monopoly sentiment may remain in trial, demonstrated or even established as this country.

A NOTABLE CONVENTION.

A Convention is called to assemble in Washington to be composed wholly of lawyears, the purpose of which is to devise means for securing uniformity of laws in the United States relating to marriage and There is no subject connected with the laws of the domestic relations that is so fraught with interest to the investigator or of importance to American society. The independency of the States it is not proposed to disturb in the matter of making laws concerning marriage and divorce . it is not even proposed to ask for an amendment to the Federal Constitution in order to invest Congress with greater powers; it is proposed only to devise means to secure uniformity, through consultation, and by the force of reason to bring the people of the several States into agreement upon what shall constitute cause for divorce, and what shall be deemed proper celebration and evidence of marriage.

Of course this will be a serious task, one that must enlist a great amount of energy, philanthrophy and untiring patience, but it can be accomplished, and there is no class of men who can so well do it as law yers. Fortunately they have the sympathy and active aid of the clergy, the leading essayists, the best thinkers of the day, the great sociologists and the majority of the foremost thinkers and workers for woman's welfare.

It is undeniable that under our present diverse systems we are legalizing polygamy; that we are destroying respect for the sanctity of marriage; that we are fostering crime and immorality, and hardening the sensibilities of youth concerning the shamefulness and wickedness of violation of marital vows. We have the authority of President Woolsey for the fact that our ratio of divorces to marriages or to population exceeds that of any country in the timony in behalf of the freedom of our institutions and the liberties the people enjoy-it is rather evidence of a moral retrogressive drift that ought to alarm so-

MOUNTAIN MAID. Heroine of a Queer Romance and Heiress to $15,000. One of the Boston Sunday papers prints a very romantic story of the discovery in the Tennessee mountains of the outcast daughter and heiress of a Nantucket physician. It appears that Dr. Augustus Franklin, who had lived on the island since 1862, and was, perhaps, the leading physician in all Nantucket, left the place and was gone about sixteen months. When he returned he inserted a card in the local paper, announcing that ! he would resume his practice on a certain date. At the end of this notice was the announcement that mystified the people of Nantucket. He changed his name.

lin Augustus Ellis.

Great was the wonderment, many were the surmises and not a few were the stories told, but no one knew the truth. The physician's lips were sealed, and when, years afterward, death came, the doctor and the secret were buried together. His popularity in Nantucket, both before and after his change of name, was great. His success as a physician was extraordinary, and his participation in all the public interests of the town was marked. The opium habit, however, crept upon him, and by 1883 he was a slave to the drug. In March of that year he left the island alone and came to Boston. In May, 1884, he died at Monson, leaving a will bequeathing some $15,000 to his three sisters. Now comes the strange portion of the story. George H. Newton, of Monson, the attorney who settled the estate in behalf of the heirs, made a trip to California the following year. At Santa Ana he became acquainted with Ephraim H. Cleveland, a ormer resident of Massachusetts, who it turned out, was an acquaintance of the late Dr. Ellis. Mr. Newton was much surprised to learn from Mr. Cleveland tha Dr. Ellis had been married in 1860. Mr. Cleveland said that in company with the doctor, he was in Saylesville in 1859 where the doctor taught school and practiced

Upon learning these facts Mr. Newton began a systematic search for the widow and child, if any, for he had been in formed by Mr. Cleveland that a child had been born to Martha and Dr. Ellis a few months succeeding the latter's departure pletely counteracted by Swift who set forth to regions unknown. Mr. Cleveland havthe matter in its true light. He gained ing known the father of the child so well became at once greatly interested in the case. She told Mr. Hall that her mother had een dead about eleven years, but that her maiden name was Martha Paty. She remembers distinctly hearing her mother relating many things concerning her father whom she never saw, but whose name her mother told her was Franklin Augustus Ellis, and that he had been a dentist and a teacher before their marriage. Her mother also told her that shortly before

The girl is now in Collusville, at the house of her mother's cousin, Mrs. Eliza A. Adams, who, though she had not seen the child for many years, at once recognized her by the features that so much re sembled those of her mother. A perfect chain of evidence has been found for the time since the City Council passed a resolution that after July 1, 1888, no liquor license shall be issued.
