endurance, shall convey us hither and thither over the country in our inspection of the prairie farms.

Starting from the north-western point at Dunleith, the first halt we make is at Mendota, about seventy or eighty miles from the northern boundary of the State. It is the point of junction with a railway running westward from Chicago to the Miscissippi, opposite Burlington in Iowa. This passes through the military tract, and the country has long been partially settled. It is a rich district of prairie, very favorable to enliration. I traveled nearly 150 miles through this part of the country, and found the soil generally rich and deep, and the white clover and sown grasses very healthy and luxuriant, Some corn fields are of uncommon magnitude; one vast sweep of 2,200 acres was all in new-sown wheat, a sparkling sheet of verdure in the morning sun. The towns, most of which are not four years old, are growing rapidly. I met a carpenter from Lanarkshire, who had been settled in the country for twelve years. Though he had made money he could not keep it, but he blamed himself for this, as every steady man, he said, who had come to this part of the country from Scotland had thriven. Wages were at present lower than he had ever known them, a journeyman carpenter receiving only 4s. a day, with his board. He had seen many instances of men getting themselves into difficulties by buying more land than they had means to manage and pay for. But there is a plan of going "shares," in which a prudent Scotch laborer meets with great success. He has a farm given him to cultivate, fenced, and broken up, and seeded;—he performs the rest of the labor and carries on the larm, and pays his rent by delivering at the nearest station the half of the crop. This is an arrangement by which a steady man is sure to succeed, and the owner of the land is also well paid. arrangement by which a steady man is sure to succeed, and the owner of the land is also well paid.

The carpenter was at that time constructing a small farm house of timber by contract. The foundation was of mason work, with large underground cellar, the inside dimensions of the building being eighteen feet by twenty-four, divided into two rooms and a kitchen, with side-posts twelve feet high, boarded, lathed, and plastered, and roofed with shingle, complete for 249. Last year the same house would have cost 250; but both lumber and wages have fallen since the money panic about a third.

Following the route southward for some twenty miles, we come to the Illinois River at LaSale. This river discharges itself into the Mississippi after a course of 500 miles, during which it drains nearly all the center of Illinois, increasing its volume by the waters of many tributaries. It has been navigated by steamboats for many years, and furnishes a cheap water communication for the interchange of products anywhere along the line of the Mississippi, from St. Paul to New Orleans. My object in stopping here was to inspect the coallands, of which La Salle is the great center. Taking wagon at Ottawa, we crossed the river and drove some ten miles across the prairie, through a wage of the prairie, through a wage of the prairie, through a wage of the prairie, through a wage acourty wall account.

page, from 51. Pain to New Offeans. My object in stopping here was to inspect the coallands, of which La Salle is the great center. Taking wagon at Ottawa, we crossed the river and drove some ten miles across the prairie, through a good country—all occupied—till we reached the bed of another stream, called the Big Vermillion, where the coal makes its appearance on the surface. Here, from the strata on the river side, we entered a shaft which penetrates a seam of coal nine feet thick, so situated that it drains itself. Near this, some thin scams of cannel coal have been found. All this part of the country is underlaid with coal, which may be mined with the greatest case. The surface is fine, rolling, fertile prairie; and there is abundance of linestone everywhere. The La Salle coal field, as at present worked, produces about 1,000 tons of coal a week, and is capable of any required extension.

Returning to Ottawi, I visited a manufactory for making starch from Indian corn. It is situated advantageously inta good country for purchasing the corn, and with every advantage of abundant water-powers, and canal and railway communication. Three kinds of products are manufactured, one of fine starch, one of ordinary starch, and one for making puddings. Two pounds weight of corn yield one of starch. The corn costs a farthing, and the starch sells at the factory for 5d. a pound, so that this business should leave a good profit. There is a similar work at Oswego, in the State of New York, which has proved very profitable to its owners. The article made there has found its way to England, is now extensively used under the name of "Corn Food," and is by many considered more palatable and nutritious than either arrow-root or sago. This use of Indian corn is another of the many excellent purposes subserved by that most productive of all grain, Crossing the Illinois River at La Salle by a viaduct 2,000 feet in lensth. and so feet above. seen similar land in this State from which twenty-four crops of Indian corn had been taken in succession, without manure, and the last was a splendid crop.

The next settler was a counger man, a graduate of Yale College, who had purchased a section of land (640 acres) three years ago at nearly £3 an acre. He had built a house, inclosed his land, and broken up the half of it, put the wheat crop of last year, to which he trusted for future funds, had proved an entire failure. He spoke despondingly of his future prospects, as he had like many others, been tempted by the facilities afforded by the credit system of purchase in these Western States, to buy a much greater extent of land than his available means were adequate for. He said that they all counted on their wheat crop to "bring them out;" but that baving failed them, the whole country was straitened. He wished to sell out at $4$ 10, an acre, that he might have the means of paying off his debts, and repurchasing a smaller farm in the same locality, where his obligations and risks would be less.

All the other settlers I met in this quarter had the same tale of a wretched wheat crop. One had had 120 acres of wheat, which he examined with several experienced farmers a few weeks before harvest, and they agreed in estimating the probable yield at eighteen to twenty bushels an acre. When it was ripe he began to harvest it, but after cutting seventy acres he discovered that there was nothing but shrivelled husk in the ear, so entirely worthless that he not only desisted from cutting the rest, but set free to all that was already cut, as well as that which remained.

While the more faint-hearted were discouraged.

that was already cut, as well as that which remained.

While the more faint-hearted were discouraged by the untoward season, there were many instances of an opposite kind. A very frequent cause of failure I found to arise from the incapacity of the settler to avail himself fully of his position. The credit system tempts him to buy a large extent of land, every unsued acre of which becomes at once a dead weight upon him, If a man buys 600 neres and has not the means of cultivating more than 60, the 540 acres are a dead loss to him. He has to pay either the price or the interest of the price, of this large unproductive, and, to him, useless extent of land. The produce of the 60 acres is called upon to bear, not only its own burden, but that of the nine-tenths which are idle. The lean kine thus cat up the one fat one. In prosperous seasons so great a pull even as this can be withstood. But the first strain breaks it down.

An example of an opposite kind will show a more correct system. A person last Spring bought 640 acres of land in this neighborhood. He inclosed the whole of it, had it all plowed by contract, and sowed it with wheat. Not an acre of his purchase was left idle. It was all sown in good order and in good time, and the chances were that the whole of it would succeed. As I spent most of the month of October in making a more minute and detailed examination of farming on the prairie, and will now ask the reader to accompany ne in my ride, before troubling him with the figures and conclusions at which I finally arrived. These figures were given to me by a man of knowledge and experience; but the contract prices at present are lower than usual, and the cost of fencing and breaking is thus below the average cost of these operations. Neither is there any charge for buildings, though that would not affect the balance, as the property would be by that amount the more valuable. And it must be remembered that the wheat crop sometimes fails, while the above satisfactory result makes no allowance for failures.

I here learned the history of one of the early and most successful settlers in Illinois. He and his brother, then young men of twenty and twenty-one, came to this State thirty-four years ago, having left Ohio after an unsuccessful venture in cattle trading. They were in debt when they began business in Illinois. They arrived in what was then a wilderness, and pitched their tent on the spot where one of them now resides. They brought with them a pair of oxen, a mare, some few household utensils, a wagon, and two axes. They stopped near a "grove," and built themselves a shanty or log hut. In addition to the general st.ck, one of the brothers had a fur hat which, after his arrival he traded for a breeding sow. They worked away, gathered live stock, there being no limit to the liberty of grazing, drove them great distances to market, and accumulated money. As the money gathered they bought up all the land they could get at the government sales, at Sa an acre, continued their stock farming, and now send 100 fat cattle weekly to New York market, during the Fall season, after the cattle are fat. One of the brothers is believed to have now, in this prudent way, acquired land worth a quarter of a million sterling.

The soil in all this district is a rich black sandt bowling in fact and the one of the prothers had a further way, acquired land worth a quarter of a million sterling.

every part of the work was done by contract and would be so completed, I am enabled to show the exact cost of the whole operation, and the probable return:

sidered more palatable and nutritions than either arrow-root or sago. This use of Indian corn is another of the many excellent purposes subserved by that most productive of all grain. Crossing the Illinois River at La Salle by a viaduct 2,000 feet in length, and so feet above the bed of the stream, we had a fine view of the limestone bluffs which here rise to a height of 200 feet. After a run southward of some sixty miles, I stopped at Bloomington, which is within the district of what is usually reckoned the richest territory in the State. At this flourishing and pretty lown I had the good fortune to obtain the guidance of a gentleman of much intelligence and local experience, who unites in his own person the various futuctions of banker, lawver, judge and colonel. We spent the day in riding over the country, and in looking at the farms and talking with the settlers. They are menchiefly from the State of New York, and are all complaining of the last wheat harvest as a nearly total failure. The pioneer of the settlement thus told me his story. He came herefour years ago, and was so much pleased with the land and situation, that he advised his neighbors in the State of New York to follow his example. He purchased 2,500 facres of as fine prairie as can be desired. The first two years everything was successful. He grew more than thirty bushels of wheat an acre on the newly broken land, and solid it for 5s. a bushel. He was thus tempted to lay out the money as fast as he made it, inclosing and breaking more. The Autumn before last he sowed sweares with wheat; 600 of it was killed by freet, the snow that winter being so light as not to cover it. He plawed this up and sowed again with Spring wheat, which succeeded admirably. Last Autumn he laid down doe acres with wheat, how was somewhat late and out of season in getting wheat, which succeeded admirably. Last Autumn he laid down doe acres on the newly worthless. The long continued rains in Spring had agiven them no season for oats, and Indian corn had for the sume cau SEXTONS AND UNDERTAK-NO. SS LA SALLE STREET.
