CONSUMERS OF

COD LIVER OIL.

Knowing from experience the dissatisfaction so often attending the dispensing of many of the emulsions in the market I would call your attention to some of the features of the emulsion which I have prepared and dispensed for years with unvarying satisfaction. The Oil used is the finest Norwegian and the most scrupulous care is exercised in the choice of all material and in every detail of its manufacture. By careful manipulation this emulsion is made with the smallest possible amount of gum, and by the very minute division of the oil globules is rendered very fluid and perfectly palatable.—Each tablespoonful contains 50 per cent. of Oil and 5 grains of Hypophosphite of Lime. Samples will be gladly furnished to a. Physicians who may desire them.—Put up in pint bottles, price $1. Manufactured and sold wholesale and retail by

Literally a Local Poet.

A correspondent at Ruthenburg, Caroline county, Md., sends an ordinary local item to the Centreville Observer, in the following shape:

A good neighbor of ours—
I will publish no name,
Though the thing is no secret,
And no one's to blame—
Is building a barn and very large is the same.

It is fifty by sixty,
If measured by feet;
With a stable below,
Bricked in very neat,
And the two floors above are for hay and for wheat.

A granary? No, no!
It is strictly a barn
Like they build in the north;
And I'm telling no yarn,
For the wheat to go in it, will be in sheaf —so I l'arn.

The neighbors were summoned,
And they came from all ways,
And on last Tuesday morn
The big barn they did raise;
Then a big dinner followed—then followed much praise. B. E. N.

"A Leap in the Dark."

A MAD ACT.

The cliffs that rear their haughty head
High o'er the river's darksome bed,
Were here all naked, wild and gray,
There waving all with greenwood spray;
Here, trees from every crevice grew,
And o'er the crags their branches threw,
And there, all splintered and uneven,
The shivered rocks ascend to heaven.

It was a clear, bright night, in the depths of the mountain wilderness.

There was a long, deep, narrow valley, running north and south for many miles, flanked east and west by towering mountains.

The range on the east was called Catamount Cliffs, that on the west, Panther Peak.

Deep down in the bottom of the valley ran a low and narrow river, called the Umbra.

On this night not a sound disturbed the awful solitude of the wilderness; not a living creature appeared in sight.

Human life seemed far away.

Yet had there been light enough, a human form might have been seen on the eastern range.

It was the figure of a young girl, wrapped in a dark shawl that covered her from head to foot, gliding slowly, slowly down the winding mountain path, now passing out of sight behind a clump of trees, now coming into view again as the path turned in and out in its descent.

Sometimes she paused and leaned against a tree, as if for momentary support, and then the faint light of the moon fell upon an upturned, lovely young face, pallid with despair.

And now another figure appeared upon the scene, another and a taller young girl, enveloped in a long waterproof cloak, whose hood was drawn over her head.

She glided silently down the same path, in the same manner, keeping her eyes upon her predecessor, as if she were "shadowing" her—as indeed she was.

The first girl wound her sinuous way down the mountain side to the very foot of the ridge and edge of the river, between which and herself lay the cracks of a very recently laid railroad, whose trains, twice a day, awoke the awful echoes of the towering rocks.

Here she sat down on a fallen boulder, let her shawl drop from her form and lay in a heap around her, clasped her hands upon her knees, and turned her woeful young face up to the starlit heavens, as if help for her hidden grief were there.

Then she looked vacantly at the little cresent of the moon that was sinking slowly behind the cedar crowned summit of the western ridge. She watched it out of sight, and then let her glance slowly drop to the river at her feet. Gazing on the low river she began to mutter to herself as only the crazed or half crazed ever do.

"If I dared—if I dared," she whispered, her eyes dilating as she gazed down upon the river, whose shining, smooth dark surface reflected every star above. "If I only dared to take the plung. They say the Umbra here has no bottom, at least none that has ever been sounded. Night after night I have come here—how many times—how many times; but I have never had the courage to take that plunge! What does the poet say?

'Who would not choose
The leap attaining the repose?'

Oh, but I cannot—I cannot! Oh, for one brief fit of madness to give me courage to end it all—to end it all with me—who am afraid to die, and more afraid to live. The demon has driven me to this river's brink, night after night, but he has never driven me into it. AH-H-H!" she suddenly cried, starting to her feet. "What is that?"

It was the noise of the rushing express train from the north, gaining force and volume as it sped onwards, its thunders caught up by the echoes of the rocky cliffs on each side the river, and hurled back and forth with an overwhelming uprear that filled the valley, and seemed to threaten with annihilation every living creature in it.

The girl, standing up, gazed, breathless, upon the rushing monster, whose fiery eyes and bellowing breath were almost upon her.

She pressed her left hand hard upon her heart, and bent forward, her lips apart, her eyes dilated to their utmost capacity, and blazing fiercely, as with the suddenly kindled fires of madness.

Another instant, and with a phrenzied yell she threw her arms on high, and, swifter than an arrow from the bow, she shot downwards from the bank and threw herself head-long upon the track, under the very heat of the rushing engine.

But swifter than the arrow was the arm of love, as the watcher sprang forward and flung her off, both falling back from the impetus clear of the track, just as the express train thundered onward, shaking the solid foundations of the mountains as it passed.

At last there was silence.

Both girls, motionless, exhausted, half paralyzed, lay together where they had fallen. The elder, with every vein and artery throbbing, as if they would burst with intense excitement, still clu ched the younger in her arms, and held her as in a death-grip. Both were panic-stricken, overwhelmed and speechless.

The deliverer was the first to recover herself.

"Were you mad?" she whispered, in a husky and almost inarticulate voice.

"Yes—mad," moaned the other, after a pause.

"Oh, why did you do it?"

"I have told you—I was mad."

There was silence for a few moments, and then the elder spoke again, gravely and tenderly.

"Bevvie! what drove you to desperation?"

"I cannot tell you! Oh, I can never tell you! I wish you had not stopped me! It would have been all over by this time," moaned the girl called Bevvie.

"'All over!'"

"Yes, yes, yes, yes!" wailed the girl, rocking herself back and forward—"for I should have been out of all my misery! Ora! Ora! Why did you follow me? Why did you interfere with me?"

"I have watched you for weeks; I have followed you for days. I am responsible to the Lord for you; I was in duty bound to save you, even if I had not loved you as I do, ungrateful child!"

"Oh, if you knew!—If you knew, Ora!—Ah! why do you interfere. It would have been all over now, and I should have been past all my troubles!" wailed Bevvie.

"You say that again! And it is false! "All over?' 'Past your trouble?' Foolish girl! you would have been before your Maker for self-murder! You would have exchanged temporal grief for eternal woe!" exclaimed the elder, in a tone of intense emotion.

"Oh, no, I hope not! for I was mad then, Ora! I was mad then; indeed I was. I had not thought of doing that act one minute before I did it! But the rush of the engine, the thunder of the noise, the uproar of the echo, the fiery eye, the flaming breath, the vision of swift and sudden death, all fascinated, maddened me as I stood alone in the dark, and drew me down to the destruction from which you snatched me!"

"And yet you seem deeply to regret being saved, and you bitterly reproach me for saving you! You are inconsistent, Bevvie! But that too is a symptom of an unsound mind! Come with me! I do not know—I cannot even hazard a conjecture, as to the nature of the grief that has unsettled you. You have steadily refused to tell me. But to-night I am determined to know! for I am in the place of a mother to you, Bevvie, and I am responsible to the Lord for your well-being. Can you walk up the steep?"

"Oh, yes, I can walk," sighed the younger girl.

"Take my arm, then, and do not hesitate to lean on it with all your weight," said Ora, lifting the heavy shawl from the ground, where Bevvie had cast it, wrapping and pinning it carefully around the girl's form, and then tenderly supporting her steps as they left the spot.

And so the foster-mother of twenty-one and the adopted daughter of sixteen ascended the mountain path to their home, where the dread secret which had driven Bevvie to temporary madness was to be revealed. The above is the opening chapter of Mrs. Southworth's new story—"A Leap in the Dark"—which is begun in this week's New York Ledger. The story, as the reader may see from this specimen of it, is a very powerful one. It is a narrative of events that occurred in Maryland and Virginia many years ago, when every-day life was wild and romantic in the mountain regions of those States. Mrs. Southworth has written many good stories, but she herself thinks that this is one of her very best. Ask for the Ledger dated May 7, which can now be had at any news office or book store.

The Marriage of Miss Betty Taylor

Daughter of the late Gen. Richard Taylor and grand-daughter of President Zachary Taylor, to Mr. Walter R. Stauffer, of the extensive hardware house of Stauffer, MacCready & Co., of New Orleans, was celebrated in the Jesuits' Church, in that city, Thursday last. The social standing of the bride and bridegroom, made the event a notable one, and the wedding was one of the most brilliant that has taken place in that city for many years. The church, though very capacious, was much too small to accommodate the thousands who sought admittance, while the carriages almost blocked the wide thoroughfare in which the church is located. The bride is a charming and beautiful woman. Since the death of her brilliant and distinguished father she has lived mostly in retirement. She wore a dress of white satin over which was draped the finest point lace. The court train was elaborately trimmed with the same kind of lace. The front of the skirt was ornamented with fringes of orange blossoms and the long tulle veil was secured with sprays of the same flowers.

Ponder on these Truths.

Torpid kidneys, and constipated bowels are the great causes of chronic diseases. Kidney-Wort has cured thousands. Try it and you will add one more to their number.

Habitual costiveness afflicts millions of the American people. Kidney-Wort will cure it.

Kidney-Wort has cured kidney complaints of thirty years standing. Try it. See adv.

Mr. L. D. Gumpert, representing D. H. Jr., and L. V. Miller, of Baltimore, is in the city introducing their new brand of Navy Plug Tobacco, "Good Enough," and taking large orders. We advise all desiring a good chew to give it a trial.

Chances.

"Do not let your chances
Like sunbeams pass you by."

But send $2 to the Commonwealth Distribution Co., Louisville, Ky., and buy a ticket in the next drawing (April 30th) where you will have a chance at 1,960 prizes and perhaps draw $30,000. Address R. M. BOARDMAN, Courier Journal Building, Louisville, Ky.

DR. HAYDOCK'S

VITALIZED

KIDNEY PANACEA.

The extraordinary effect of this panacea as prepared by Dr. Haydock, upon the Kidneys and Urinary Organs is without a parallel in the history of medicine, and its results far beyond any of the Kidney remedies of the day. It stimulates Digestion, adds tone to the system, invigorates the Debilitated, and is infallible for the cure of Diabetes in its worst form.

One trial of a teaspoonful in a wine glass of water will convince the most skeptical within from ten to twenty minutes.

DISORDER OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water, or whether they be afflicted with stone or gravel, or with aches and pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys

HAYDOCK'S KIDNEY PANACEA

Will give almost immediate relief, when all other means have failed. The most powerful existing medicine for the cure of female complaints. Fifty years experience incontestably prove this remedy unrivalled for the disorders incidental to the female sex. No family should be without it, and it may be taken by young and old, as it will restore health when every other means prove unsuccessful.

To the stomach we trace dyspepsia, headache and general debility; to the liver, bile, jaundice and yellow fever; to the bowels, diarrhœa, dysentery, constipation, piles and fistula; to the lungs, consumption, etc.; to the blood, scrofula, scurvy and all cutaneous eruptions. By keeping these organs and vital fluid pure and healthy we may safely defy the attacks of disease, and no medicine yet prepared for this purpose can equal the action of

HAYDOCK'S

KIDNEY PANACEA.

HEAR WHAT IS SAID,

"It has made me a new man."

"Dr. Haydock's Panacea has increased my weight fifteen pounds."

"My wife would not be without it for any money."

"Our little boy is much better. I enclose one dollar for another bottle."

"I find it as easy to take as milk."

"We have sold thirteen bottles this week, and shall want two dozen next order."

"My morning agony is gone—thanks your Panacea."

"I find it a splendid appetizer."

Any invalid or sufferer afflicted with any Kidney disorder who will write me as to their complaint, will be treated humanely and kindly. It is my most earnest desire to investigate all forms of Diabetes, and give relief at all times. If you are too poor to purchase, write me anyway, and your case will have immediate attention.

CAUTION.

Observe that the signature of Allen Haydock is across the mouth of each bottle.
