A MODEL CITIZEN.

Colonel William Forsythe of Fresno was selected by the late Governor Woodward to be a National Commissioner for California to have in charge on behalf of the people of America the World's Exposition. Colonel Forsythe's appointment affords an excellent illustration of the manner in which selections are made when political methods are considered. Just exactly what qualification the redoubtable Colonel had for the position to which he was chosen is not, and perhaps never will be fully explained. When he sought a still more honorable and lucrative position the question of his citizenship arose. It was asserted with some confidence that he was not a citizen of the United States and therefore not a citizen of California; but on the contrary was a subject of the British Crown. This he denied indignantly, declaring that he had been naturalized by a court in San Francisco. Notwithstanding this assertion of citizenship on his part, he was naturalized in the Superior Court of San Francisco County on last Friday.

This action establishes two things. First, that Colonel Forsythe did not tell the truth when he claimed to have been previously naturalized; and second, that his conception of the rights and duties of American citizenship were held in such light esteem that he did not choose to assume them until a fat office was in sight. Practically we bought this citizen of Great Britain, and the purchase price was and honorable office at $6,000 a year. We presume that many citizens may be purchased with like honors and emoluments. Perhaps one-half of the population of Great Britain would accept American citizenship on the terms proposed to be accorded to Colonel Forsythe. In this they would resemble the South Sea Islander who, shortly after his conversion to Christianity, said: "I would like to be an Englishman if there was a vacancy." Most Englishmen would like to be American citizens if there are positions vacant paying $6,000 per year and having within the purview of their functions the appointment of about thirty-six persons to first-class positions. It is doubtful whether Colonel Forsythe could find thirty-six Englishmen in America to take all the positions within his gift, should he be confirmed, who like himself have held their citizenship at such discount that they seek naturalization only when there is a fat office in sight.

The worst feature connected with this matter is the time which Colonel Forsythe has held his citizenship in abeyance. He is about 60 years of age and claims to have invaded American territory in his minority. He must, therefore, have been a resident of America a period covering about forty years, during which time he enjoyed all the protection, privileges and immunities guaranteed to citizens of this country and yet remained a subject of the British Crown. The fact convicts him of at least constructive contempt for American institutions and citizenship. The man who can reside in a country forty years, covering the entire period of his manhood, and remain an alien in allegiance is undeserving public trust, honor or emolument. This closes the case against Colonel William Forsythe. If any Board of Control shall confirm his nomination after this exhibition of contempt for American institutions and citizenship we shall rather favor the tactics of the South and want to play the part of secession.

Perhaps there are no American citizens in California deserving of the honors or emoluments of the great office which Mr. Forsythe seeks. Perhaps there is no horticulturist here who is not an Englishman who could be suggested for the office. We are disposed to think, however, that there are Americans, either native or naturalized, who might be selected for this place, and that common decency or ordinary modesty would suggest to Colonel Forsythe that he now withdraw. This is not, however, to be hoped for. Colonel Forsythe does not belong to the category of men who are noted for their modesty in matters of this kind. He urged Maxwell when he knew that he had no qualification. A modest man would have been ashamed of his candidature. Colonel Forsythe is not modest. He remains a resident of America forty years and is appointed to a highly honorable and very lucrative office. Finding his character as an alien militating against his nomination, he rushes in and becomes a citizen. His naturalization under the circumstances was modest; and the worst feature of the whole matter is that certain of our contemporaries, notably the Post of San Francisco, say that Colonel Forsythe has been naturalized, and that settles the whole matter. This impoverished conception of the duty of citizenship and the elevated motive which inspired naturalization is about as un-American as Colonel Forsythe's hasty naturalization.

In the meantime, what is the matter with J. DeBarth Shorb that he could not be appointed and confirmed to the chieftaincy of the Horticultural Department? He is anative American. During the war he sympathized with the South and was political prisoner in Fort Lafayette. This is a thoroughbred Southern record. In the last Presidential campaign Mr. Shorb supported Benjamin Harrison for President, the Republican nominee. He is a protectionist of the old school, and the issues growing out of the slavery question having died, he returned to his old Whig affiliations and became a protectionist. This is a thoroughbred stalwart Northern record. But, aside from his political record, Mr. Shorb is a horticulturist of the broadest experience, a man of magnificent attainment and high administrative ability, a gentleman in every instinct and attribute of his nature, a citizen of the purest life, and the kind of a man whom men of upright character delight to honor. There is no exaggeration in this commendation of Mr. Shorb. The statement is amply justified by his conduct during a long and honorable career as a citizen of America and the State of California. We therefore ask again, Why is it that Shorb cannot be appointed? The answer is not far to seek. Mr. Shorb is an American gentleman who attends to his own business. He is not a ward politician. He has not claimed or demanded anything for any service he may have rendered parties. He is not a piece on the chess-board of politics to be moved by the place-hunters; and for these reasons he is liable to be overlooked, or, if presented, to be repudiated.

We reserve for an early future the task of disclosing to the people of California the whole story of the contest for the headship of Department "B." In the meantime we think the people of California should petition Director-General Davis and the double-barreled confirmation power to appoint a citizen of California whom California itself desires and one who will be a credit to the State.

ENDOWMENT OF THE STANFORD FREE KINDERGARTEN.
Some years ago a number of people of large means founded free kindergarten schools in the city of San Francisco. Mrs. Leland Stanford was, we believe, the first among these, and from time to time as she noted the growing usefulness and wise beneficence of these institutions, she added to their number. She has now become so well convinced of the inestimable good of the kindergarten system, that she has determined to place the schools she has founded beyond the risks of fugitive support on her part. She has therefore set aside $100,000, the issues of which trust will be applied in perpetuity by its custodians to the maintenance of five free kindergarten schools in San Francisco.

This insures them; gives them the character of permanency and removes them utterly from any liability of failure of support. These schools by location and character address themselves to the conditions of people who most need them, and they therefore serve an especially useful purpose in the educational system of the metropolis.

This endowment by Mrs. Stanford reflects not only the liberality of wisely administered wealth, but the broadest human sympathy; it is a helping of others to help themselves in the trust and fullest sense, because it begins at the very root of character building, and its energy is directed towards the growing of good men and women, the shaping of human growth into useful lives. The possession of great wealth becomes offensive only when its use is narrow, selfish and illiberal. It is a lofty beneficence when its use is directed toward the betterment of the race, the helping of those willing to aid themselves, the conservation of educational and industrial activity and discriminating disbursement in charity.

Mrs. Stanford's conception of the wise use of large means is clearly exemplified not only by the specific endowment referred to in the outset, but in many other generous, unselfish and large disbursements and investment of her means among the people of California.

A New Cherry.

H. A. Bassford of Yuba Valley claims to be the fortunate owner of a new cherry, which he has named "Bassford's Seedling." The tree has for the first time come into fruit this year. The cherries are extremely large, some of them measuring three and five-eighths inches in circumference. The fruit has the flavor of the Black Tartarian, but is more of the color of the Royal Anne. The fruit is an acquisition by knowing ones who have had the opportunity of making careful inspection.—California Fruit Grower.
