The sulvons are in many instances elegantly fitted up, and, in truth, best anything I have seen in Tucson. Many of the miners have cabins of then own, which, being placed almost wherever there is a v cant spot, gives the town (with the exception of the principal streets) rather a mixed-up appearance. The population of tween 2500 and 3000, and of this number I cannot find more than 450 who are engaged in mining; what the remainder do it would be hard to say, but all seem to live, and for a mining community are quiet and well-behaved. Not once have I heard a pistol-shot in town, and it seems to me that a few "drunks" (they are pretty heavily fixed for this) constitute the sum of offenses committed.
