HOME PEACE THREATENED BY ROWS OVER RELIGION

Wife Finds Trouble in Her Path

BY MARTHA LEE

There are two subjects it is absolutely nutty to argue about. One is politics and the other is religion. It is bad enough to exchange adverse ideas on these two subjects with a casual friend who is not apt to be seen for the next two years, but to discuss the subject at the native hearth, when the props of the household differ, is slow suicide

You see, a man's religious beliefs are very close to his heart. He loves them and cherishes them as dearly as he does his own soul. And to see them ridiculed through lack of understanding lashes him to rib-bons. And one always can not have patience with ignorance.

In the first place, every man is heading toward the same place the best way he knows how. His manner of worship is performed with the same intention. He is sincere in his belief that his dogma is the

The bulk of our denominations claim to follow the teachings of Christ. And yet, when a man of one religion quarrels over dogmatic beliefs with a man of another religion, he is breaking one of the greatest lessons Christ taught, that

Trouble in Married Life

A great many times people of different religious beliefs fall in love and marry. And, too many times, this is the source of constant trouble between them, sometimes not through any fault of their own. Many times it is the result of constant nagging from the "in-laws" on one side or the other.

As I say, a man's religion may be his whole life; he may believe what he believes to the last ditch, but that is no reason for him to lose respect for other men's beliefs. That man is right, as far as he knows how to be right, and no other man is privileged to ridicule his manner of

A wife who is being made miserable through constant argument on the religious question has written about her troubles.

Lately, every once in a while, he has taken it upon himself to start such an argument. I will not argue with him. If he is willing to sit down and listen to me explain that which he does not understand, I am ready to do so, but as soon as I start, it is sure to lead to a quarrel.

I don't know what I can do, Miss Lee. It results in a bitterness that lasts several days. I would not mind so much if he helleved in as sincerely as I do in mine, but he hasn't. He is just opposed to mine, and does not leave me in peace. I am so unhappy about it, because I love him and can not understand why it should be an issue.

Goes Own Way

I never have tried to folst my religion on him. I have gone my way, following my faith as I best know how. Now his relatives did not approve of the match in the first place, and every time we were around with them, they made slighting remarks about the customs of my church. One can not help but become angry with that, but I always managed to hold a civit tongue in my head, even though I would be seething inside.

I knew it was because they did not understand my faith, and, after once trying to explain a certain custom, I gave
