Written for NEA Service COOL drink in the new glassware, a wicker chair and a friend to talk to-now there's a immer sport for you.

Most chilled beverages are both food and drink. Fruit juices give vitamins, cream in iced coffee and other drinks gives nourishment, and sugar is a good form of concentrated energy needed as much during outdoor summer activity as in winter.

So you can serve these beverages instead of the more troublesome afternoon tea. Pass crackers or small

The shops shine with the love-liness of new beverage accessories. All the new glasses are easy to hold. Stemmed glasses are out for a time, at least.

Glasses Are Barrel-Shaped

The new ones tend to be barrelshaped, running down to a square or round base of matching or contrasting color. Some are startling with penciled paralleled bands of gold, many have monograms in modern design etched on them, others are flecked in pale colors.

Imagine golden ginger ale, apricot syrup and a sprig of fresh mint in one of these generous sized glasses, musical with the clink of ice cubes with a green maraschino cherry frozen inside.

The heavy Mexican glassware of greenish blue holds its popularity, just making you thirsty for an orange fizz, interesting with slices of fresh lime. And, of course, iced coffee suggests the tall crystal

Light and Playful
