The condition has been properly ascribed to the work of German agents who are said to have bribed the officers in charge of Russian factories.

The Germans are throwing regiments against the various entrenched positions and wearing down Russian resistance. The Russians hold two positions near Warsaw, the entrenched camp at Novogeorgivsk, commanding the river junction and the railroad bridge across the Bug river; also the very important position of Prag, a suburb of Warsaw on the east.

King Emanuel, of Italy, is making preparations to head the army for a triumphant entry into the city, whose inhabitants are mainly Italians and who will welcome the invaders as liberators. (The city the Italians call Gorizia is the Austrian city of Gorz, capital of the Austrian crownland of Gorz and Gradisca, about 390 miles south west of Vienna by rail, and has a population of 25,432, two-thirds being Italians and the remainder Slovenes and Germans. It is 35 miles N. N. W. of Trieste. It is a pretty little city and on account of its equable climate has been called the Nice of Austria. It is heavily defended and is, in some respects, the gateway to Trieste.—Ed. Gard. Isl.)

The Russian forces slowly retreating eastward from Warsaw are in greatest menace from the north.

The rear guards of other fronts are putting up stubborn fights. The enemy held in check. But in the north the advance of the Germans is rapidly descending.
