THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE AT CROWN HILL CEMETERY, WHERE FUNERAL OBSERVANCES WERE HELD—PREACHED BY GENERAL PRATT.

APPEAL OF DECORATION.

General Henry T. Pratt made an appeal to the public in favor of a monument to be erected in memory of the dead soldiers of the American Revolution. The monument was to be a large stone obelisk, standing about 50 feet high, and made of marble. It was to be erected at Crown Hill Cemetery, and the money necessary for its construction was to be raised by public subscription. The appeal was made to the public to support this monument, as it was believed that it would be of great benefit to the country, and would help to preserve the memory of the brave soldiers who fell in the war.

THEIR FALLEN FELLOWS.

At the same time, the general made a strong appeal to the public to support the work of the Soldiers' Home, which was also to be erected at Crown Hill Cemetery. The home was to be a large building, and was to be occupied by the veterans of the war, who would be provided with food, clothing, and shelter. The general said that the work of the Soldiers' Home was of great importance, as it would help to support the veterans of the war, who had given so much for their country.

THEIR LAST REST.

The general also made a strong appeal to the public to support the work of the Ladies' Aid Society, which was also to be erected at Crown Hill Cemetery. The society was to be a large building, and was to be occupied by the widows and daughters of the soldiers who fell in the war. The general said that the work of the Ladies' Aid Society was of great importance, as it would help to support the widows and daughters of the soldiers, who had given so much for their country.

THEY DIED FOR THE NATION.

The general also made a strong appeal to the public to support the work of the Soldiers' Home, which was also to be erected at Crown Hill Cemetery. The home was to be a large building, and was to be occupied by the veterans of the war, who would be provided with food, clothing, and shelter. The general said that the work of the Soldiers' Home was of great importance, as it would help to support the veterans of the war, who had given so much for their country.

THEIR LAST REST.

The general also made a strong appeal to the public to support the work of the Ladies' Aid Society, which was also to be erected at Crown Hill Cemetery. The society was to be a large building, and was to be occupied by the widows and daughters of the soldiers who fell in the war. The general said that the work of the Ladies' Aid Society was of great importance, as it would help to support the widows and daughters of the soldiers, who had given so much for their country.

THEY DIED FOR THE NATION.