KINSLER

TROUBLE IN PORTUGAL.

MADRID-Last-Sunday's dispatches from Madrid say that the considerable differences which have developed between the Catholics and the Government will probably be smoothed over by the election of Mr. Agramonte to the Vice-presidency, so that Mr. Agramonte, who is a leader of the Liberal party, and Mr. Castelnaudary, who is a leader of the Conservatives, have agreed to work for the consolidation of the Government.

The Catholic party, however, is still opposed to the demands of the Liberals for the abolition of the Church, and the Catholic party has been heard to say that it will not consent to the abolition of the Church without a fight. The two parties have been bitter enemies for years, and the Catholic party has always been in the ascendancy. The Liberals, however, have been gaining ground, and the Catholic party is now in a weak position.

The election of Mr. Agramonte to the Vice-presidency is expected to bring about a truce between the two parties, and it is hoped that the Catholic party will now be willing to accept the present situation. The Catholic party has been in power for many years, and it is feared that the Liberals will not be able to bring about any change in the existing regime.

But the present situation is not without its difficulties. The Catholic party is still opposed to the abolition of the Church, and it is not certain that the Liberals will be able to carry their program through. The Catholic party has a large following, and it is not likely that the Liberals will be able to overcome its opposition.

The situation is therefore one of great uncertainty, and it is not known what will happen in the near future. The Catholic party is still in the ascendancy, and it is feared that the Liberals will not be able to bring about any change in the existing regime.

The Catholic party has been in power for many years, and it is not likely that the Liberals will be able to overcome its opposition. The situation is therefore one of great uncertainty, and it is not known what will happen in the near future.