A ROYAL HERO.

When there is true heroism in a nation, times of great danger or distress will bring it to the front. King Humbert of Italy has shown himself to be the stuff of which heroes are made, by his conduct in presence of the cholera plague. When the awful scourge entered Naples, the nobility and wealthy people took flight, and left those who could not get away to cope with the disease as best they might. The usual panic seized the populace, and they dropped off like sheep. The King entered the city and did all he could to allay the popular terror, institute measures to stay the plague, and relieve the distress attending it. The royal example shamed at least a portion of the nobility into resuming their manhood. They returned to the city and went vigorously to work to quell the excitement, check the epidemic and feed the thousands of people who were starving on account of the general suspension of business. Ladies of the highest nobility, the latest accounts say, are working like slaves in the ambulance service of the Red Cross Society and in nursing the sick under the direction of the Sanitary Commission. Whenever the King shows himself—and he has been making daily rounds of the slums—the whole population turns out to do him honor, and old residents state that the enthusiasm exceeds that manifested when Garibaldi entered Naples and was hailed as the savior of Italy.

THE MINISTRY'S APOLOGIST.

The Advertiser disclaims speaking for the Ministry every time it is taken up in shielding the Ministry. Unless, however, the Ministry repudiates its defender, there is no just reason why the Ministry should not be attacked upon the grounds of defence set up for it. As to the violence attributed to our recent "attack" upon the Ministry, although gentleness of treatment might be inconsonant with faithfulness, yet the violence of language was not remarkable provided its burden was just. If the best apology for the failure of the Ministers is that there is so much antagonism to them in the body politic as to hamper their administration, their only dignified course is to retire from the hopeless task. Possibly the country might fare worse at the hands of their successors, but if the latter have an example before their eyes of the impossibility of a comfortable tenure of power while at variance with public sentiment, they would likely strive to win the nation's favor by giving it better government. Again, if the Government's greatest difficulty at this juncture is want of money, it does not imply hatred of "Gibson"—as our contemporary puts it—to enquire how it comes that the country has been brought to bankruptcy, from the position of having a surplus in the treasury in which the present Ministry found it. And if a reply be given to such an enquiry which is prejudicial to the Government, and the Advertiser remains silent as to the merits of the case, its silence is more damaging to the Ministry than the most violent attacks of its opponents. We gave, in brief, the causes that led to the impoverishment of the national treasury, yet the only rebuttal ventured is a complaint that we indulged in a violent attack upon the Ministers. If that is the best defence that can be made for it, the Ministry is as bankrupt in character as it is in cash.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A funny freak of red-tapeism is exhibited in the Governor of Alicant's quarantining of the Health Inspector sent by the Italian Home Office.

A conference of the three European Emperors—of Germany, Russia and Austria—was to have been held on Monday week. The occasion is deemed ominous in view of the general jealousy on the continent toward England.

If it was not inconsistent for the Advertiser to deny to the opponents of the Government the credit of defeating the bank charter, and a few days afterward to attack them for having produced an agitation that killed the measure, then the dictionaries should be revised to put a meaning on the word "inconsistent" which would be inconsistent with its present general acceptance.

The Democrats make a good point when they say that under Republican rule the public lands—which should be a safety valve for labor out of employment in seasons of depression—have been cut up into principalities for millionaires. "The land for the people" is beyond doubt the true doctrine for young countries that have lands in the keeping of their Governments. It is surprising that in this respect the United States and Canada have largely ignored the lessons afforded them in the bitter experience of old countries.

At the annual meeting of the Planters' Association, which will be held in about two weeks, the best thought of the planting interest will be given to the labor question. Until then, we do not see much profit in taking the advice of the Advertiser to discuss the matter. To return the compliment, however, we would advise our contemporary not to flatter the Government with any encouragement that the planters can be beguiled into replenishing the treasury without adequate assurance that the labor supply would be made a first charge on the funds. If the planters should consider no assurance from the present Ministry to be adequate, so much the worse for the Ministry. And if the money has to come out of the planters' pockets, it is possible they may prefer to pay for immigration direct, rather than make an investment in Government bonds, the proceeds of which, as likely as not, might go to paying old Government debts on immigration and other accounts.

ANTISHAMUS ON SHAMS.

EDITOR BULLETIN:—My name is Antishamus, and, as my name indicates, I am against all sham and humbug and bunkum. You say your columns are open to everybody, if everybody keeps within proper bounds. I am glad of it, for that gives me a chance, and I will try to keep within proper bounds. If I don't, you can shut me out, that's all. You are an editor, and know everything; I am not, and know nothing; but do a heap of looking on and thinking. I think and see many things which I never see in the papers, and I see some things in the papers which I think ought not to be there. But everybody does not think and see alike. A knowledge of this makes me tolerant of much that I dislike. Perhaps, if I am allowed, I shall be saying things that others dislike, and they may not be so lenient towards me. I am not troubled about that; for I am a wild Arab of the desert and care nothing for the good or bad opinions of mankind, as long as I possess the consciousness of being on the side of truth.

Well, I was going to say about papers, that I read them and get confused. This may be owing to a natural lightness in my upper story. One paper tells me one thing, and the next contradicts it. There is something wrong somewhere: they can't both be right. One paper says the country is all broken up, the other says it's O. K. There must be some falsifying or shamming on one side or the other. What is it? Perhaps a little on both. I am inclined to think so. Then I am against both. Long years ago, when I was making dirt pies in the sandy desert, I heard a story about two travellers meeting from opposite directions, and just where they met there was a shield hanging on a tree. One traveller said it was made of gold, the other swore it was pure silver. After a big squabble they discovered it was half-and-half—one side gold and the other silver. So they were both right; they were both wrong, and neither was wrong: they were half-and-half. That may be the case with the newspapers. Everybody knows that the best intention cannot always discover the exact truth, and that in many matters the diminutive mind of man is incompetent to judge between truth and error. But if the newspapers cannot be a reflex of absolute truth, let them approximate as near to it as they know how, carefully avoiding all partisan coloring as they would the dread Simoom of Bendahar.

That's not all. It is not enough that newspapers abstain from shamming; they should take the lead in exposing and opposing all shams, of all kinds and colors. The man who has the courage to lift up his voice against the sham and bunkum lying around loose in this perverse world, is my friend and brother. I feel deep yearning within me to be of service in that line myself, and would like you, Mr. Editor, to publish a collection of Arabian tales which I have preserved with great care; also some scattered but rare fragments of Egyptian Chronicles, written by a learned captain who flourished many centuries prior to the granite formation; and that celebrated book, "Agamemnon's Discourses," an Alexandrian copy, discovered in the ancient ruins of Wailuku by a classical native of that city. In these faithful records of the past there is to be found, ready to hand, a paraphrase of every species of humbug, imposture, corruption and villainy which has ever astonished or disgusted the world, from the first conviction for swindling before Mr. Justice Adam down to the Bank Charter and the appearance of small fish in the harbor. I propose to send you these valuable MSS. as occasion may offer or inclination prompt.

ANTISHAMUS.

Honolulu, Sept. 15, 1884.

LATE FOREIGN NEWS.

The late Secretary Folger was born on the island of Nantucket, where the first of the name settled more than two hundred years ago. Benjamin Franklin's mother was Hannah Folger; and, singularly enough, her mother—Franklin's grandmother—was brought from England under the emigrant system which then prevailed, and purchased by her future husband for £20. The Secretary was probably a distant connection of the great printer-philosopher.

Tammany Hall has decided by a vote of 870 to 87 to support the Democratic ticket for the Presidency. All John Kelly's influence has thus gone for naught except in the disaffection it may have created which this action of Tammany is too late to remove.

The Republican majority for Governor of the State of Maine is about twenty thousand.

The Pope of Rome has given about $12,000 in different donations for the relief of the cholera sufferers.

Fifteen thousand persons attended the funeral of the Fenian Duggan at Dublin, Ireland, Sept. 14th.

Senator Anthony, a veteran journalist and an ex-Governor of Rhode Island, is dead.
