Take Good Care of the Children. If you have children you will be interested in the experience of Mr. John Cook, of Pilot, Vermillion Co., Ill. He says: "Two years ago two of my family, a young man and a girl, had very severe and dangerous attacks of bloody flux. The doctor here was unable, after a week's time, to check or relieve either case. I threw the doctor overboard and began using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Improvement was seen very soon and my children arose in a few days from what I feared would be their deathbed. It is a grand, good medicine." For sale by all dealers. Benson, Smith & Co., Agents.

Another Lost Island.

A few days ago mention was made in this column of the alleged disappearance in an earthquake of the principal island of the Sangir group, in longitude 125 deg., midway between the islands of Mindanao and Celebes. News now comes that a Dutch skipper sailing along the northwest coast of Australia reports the disappearance of Expedition Island at the mouth of Collier Bay in Western Australia. The island is almost exactly in the same longitude as Sangir Island, and nearly twenty degrees south. As the sea in which it lies is unfrequented by shipping it is quite possible that its submergence, if it occurred, was simultaneous with the submergence of Sangir below the waves. The Dutch skipper reports that he sailed over the spot where the island had been, and found eight fathoms of water, whereas all round the place the depth was normal for the Sea of Timor, say 70 to 100 fathoms. The island was 13 miles long by one mile wide; it was 40 miles from the coast of Australia.

Scientific periodicals note the event as a fresh illustration of the changes of level which are taking place in the southern continent. The coast of the colony of Victoria and of Tasmania is known to be rising. Each year the land gains a little on the sea, so that in places it is found necessary to lengthen piers in order to maintain the original depth of water at their seaward end. To balance this the coast of Northern and Western Australia is gradually but slowly sinking, and the sea is gaining on the land. The submergence is not confined to Australia. It extends to many of the islands of the East Indian Archipelago from the straits of Sunda to the Southern Philippine Islands. The inhabitants point to beaches which are now covered by the waves at low water, but which in past times were sites of villages. The same phenomenon is observed in several places on the western coast of South America.

The whole crust of the globe is probably in motion, changing its relative level, as it gradually adjusts itself to the contraction of the interior on which it rests. In the north the circumpolar regions are rising. If we had records to guide us, we should probably find that Grant Land, Grinnell Land and Franz Josef's Land are several inches higher than they were when they were first discovered. And simultaneously the coast of Greenland in the neighborhood of Disco is sinking, so that stakes which were driven into the beach to moor boats to are now under water. It is easy to understand that, without any volcanic agency, the surface of the earth, resting as it does on a foundation which must be incandescent, must rise and fall as the action of fire expands and contracts its subterranean support.

This process has gone on throughout all time. In the Arabian Sea, not far from the mouth of the Indus, the voyager in the Bombay steamers can see, when the water is clear, the peaks and minarets of a drowned city at the bottom of the ocean. The steamer passes over them as they lie in their watery grave. At some far distant period that city lived and flourished, probably on the ocean border, and may have been a place of trade and prosperity. The hungry waves gradually rose and rose, capturing a street here, a square there, until the people were driven out and the city was engulfed. It was an illustration on a great scale of the action of the agency which terminated the terrestrial life of Expedition Island.

Donnelly, in his story of Atlantis, supposes that the alternate uprising and subsidence of the earth's crust culminated, in the case of that lost continent, in a frightful catastrophe in which man and all his works perished in a night. This theory implies active seismic agency, and all that can be said of it is that no example of such work has occurred within the historical period. In our time the crust of the earth probably rises and falls continually all over the globe, but the changes are imperceptible to the observer; it is only where earthquakes come into play that whole islands or districts suddenly vanish from sight.—San Francisco Call.

It was Mary Sherlock's Wake. "There lays a hundred years o' peace and happiness." It was the wake of Mary Sherlock, who had died of old age; and took place on the night of Thursday, March 19th, 1891, in the City of New York. The room was crowded with men and women, old and young, and an aged junkman, who sat on a keg, in the middle of the room, said to every new-comer, "There lays a hundred years of peace and happiness," to which the party responded in chorus, "Faith, Mike, niver truer words did ye speak."

For Grandma Sherlock had come to America from Ireland before any of them, and, no doubt, was at least 105 years old when she ended her long journey. But she was one of the old stock, and never knew what illness was. How different is such a story as this, for instance, told by a woman! "I was never well in my life," she says, "always weak and ailing, constantly sick, and troubled with giddiness and swimming in the head. People who did not know me would at times think I was tipsy. I always had a poor appetite, with bad taste in the mouth in the morning, and pain after eating. I had great pain and tightness in the chest and side, and was languid and tired after the least exertion, so I was unable to do any work or get my own living. "As to sick headache, I was seldom free from it, and often my heart would palpitate, so I had to stop and hold myself, for fear of falling. I was nearly always under the doctor, and when I was so, something formed in my mouth that the doctor called "traula," and I was confined in the Exeter Hospital 17 weeks with it. "From that time I was worse than ever; and after eating the least morsel of food I heaved at the stomach and would spit up a sour fluid. "Better and worse I continued until April, 1888, when I became much worse, and my abdomen swelled until it reached a great size, and a pain in the side and back made me scream out. Indeed I was in such agony I could not stir hand or foot. Just then my neighbor, Mrs. Harris, wife of Josiah Harris, the road contractor, came in, and I had to be carried to bed. So dreadful was the pain that I broke out into a heavy sweat, and a faintness came over me. Mrs. Harris stayed with me and poulticed me, but as I got no better my mother, who lived at Rousdon, was sent for. She came at once and sent for a doctor, as I was in terrible distress, and fighting for breath. The doctor said he could not tell what was the matter, and a second doctor was sent for from Seaton by the clergyman, who thought I was dying. So critical was my condition considered that prayers were made for me at the church. "The swelling of the bowels increased, and the doctor said if this swelling did not go down I could not get better, as it must be a tumor. He seemed puzzled by my case and kept changing my medicine, but I got no relief. My brother and others who came to see me all believed me to be dying. "After two months of this a lady named Mrs. Stocker, who lives at Rousdon, came to see me and told me about a medicine called Mother Seigel's Syrup, and said, "You try it, for it once saved my life." "I sent to Mr. Gage, the grocer at Seaton, and got a bottle, and before I had taken the contents I felt better, the pain was easier, and the swelling I have spoken of gradually went away. After having taken three bottles I was able to move about, and now feel better than I ever did in my life before, and am stronger than when I was sent for, as if I had known of Mother Seigel's Syrup sooner, it would have saved me years of misery. (Signed) "MRS. MARY HOARE, "Combyne, Axminster, Devon, Feb. 16, 1891."

This was a case of chronic indigestion and dyspepsia, with terrible constipation; the swelling was caused by matter in the intestines which had probably been slowly accumulating for months. In the meantime this festering mass filled the whole system with poison, causing all the other symptoms described. Women are subject to this far more than men, on account of their careless habits. It occasionally happens that surgical interference is necessary. There was no tumor of course, but in the end there might have been, had not Seigel's Syrup removed the loathsome deposit before it was too late.

What a pity that women (and men too) will not check the first symptoms of disease, and thus, like Mary Sherlock, enjoy a hundred years of peace and happiness.
