Opinions of a Noted Japanese Spe cialist in Matters of Leprosy.

BY ALBERT S. ASHMEAD, M. D., NEW YORK.

(Continued) According to Goto, the disease is not contagious; this is at least his conclusion from his studies in Japan. But the Hawaiian experiences puzzle him; the disease came thither from China, spread rapidly, and soon grew severe.

According to the Japanese profession in general, leprosy is inherited. Goto thinks otherwise, or says he does. But the fact that such an assurance, or profession of opinion. is the surest means of pleasing the Japanese of all classes, detracts much from the author's reliability In the present state of public opin ion, the appearance of leprosy in one member of a family ostracizes the whole clan. Let me observe here, that any one who knows how many leper villages are spread over Japan would naturally believe that this state of things was the conse-quence of a belief in heredity. But t is not so. When a member of a family finds himself stricken by leprosy he is very often accompanied in his retirement by all the members of his family; they will not allow him to sacrifice himself in order to save them from the leper ostracism. It is, in my opinion, this admixture of an enormous amount of pure Hawaiian Jockey Club blood with the contaminated one, in leper villages, which has counter acted the law of immunity after four generations of lepers, marrying with lepers. Statistics in Japan, according to our author, show apparent heredity in only twenty to thirty percent. "Excepting these," he says, "the disease is always spontaneous" (sic).

The following causes propagate the infection: parasitical skin diseases, small pox, pregnancy, syphilis. measles, ringworm, vitiligo, bruises and wounds, uncleanness of body. carelessuess of sanitation, excess of sexual intercourse, living in swamps. Sometimes it follows drunkenness, eating of whale flesh and maguro or tunny fish, horse and cat flesh snakes, or other unusual articles of food. These act as poison; in fact, leprosy is always the result of some 2d Race - KALAKAUA PURSE. kind of poisoning. This extraneous poison acts as an irritant on the hid-

This is shown by the fact that whenever the blood of a leper is improved, or brought back in some manner to its former condition great benefits are always observed. This is the foundation of the elder Goto's All Race- are to be run or trotted under the Rules of the Hawattan Jonkey cure of leprosy. The author is particularly struck by the fact of the failing out of hairs, evebrows, mustaches, whiskers, etc. This, he thinks, must evidently be attributed to deficiency of nourishment; a peculiar constituent necessary for the alimentation of the hair has disappeared from the blood, and this special vital element must be restored.
