THE BLIND SPARROW.

A Pretty Story That Seems to Prove That Birds Love One Another.
 There was a commotion in the apple tree, where the sparrows had congregated in great numbers and with more than usual demonstrations of interest in the first flight of a young sparrow family. They seemed greatly excited, uttering strange notes of wonder or of fear, as if something were out of the regular order.
 One of the young birds was standing on the edge of the nest, timidly fluttering its wings, while the others urged it to flight, both by precept and by example. When the poor thing ventured to use its wings, it fell down fluttering to the ground.
 Ruby picked it up tenderly, and, trying to soothe its distress, she discovered that it had no eyes. The head was otherwise perfect, but where the eyes should have been it was curiously smooth, with no signs of even embry-olic orbs of vision.
 Here was a strange freak of nature, a curiosity, to be sure, but a sad fate for the poor little sparrow to be blind.
 What chance could a blind bird have to make its way in the world?
 Ruby placed it carefully in a basket, where the old birds brought food to it for several days until it gained strength and courage to try its wings in an upward flight.
 Then there was a curious school of methods in our back yard. All the sparrow colony seemed interested in the blind bird and evinced considerable wit or wisdom in their plans for teaching it how to reach the tree where so many of them made their home.
 Relays of sparrows were perched upon a bush, the fence, the tree, all making plaintive calls, which the blind bird answered. After many efforts it succeeded in reaching the first group of its friends, and they received it with great demonstrations of delight. Success brought courage, and in a few hours it had reached the tree, guided by the calls of its comrades.
 The blind bird is full grown now, but dependent upon the neighborly offices of its friends, which fly down with it every day into the grass under the apple tree, and the afflicted bird waits patiently, while they feed it with the crumbs that we leave there and a few bugs and worms by way of relish.—Our Annual Friends.

Apples—Don't come up, little bird, we're all sour.—New York Journal.
