REFORMATION IN CHINA

[From the Celestial Empire.] There is every reason to believe that not a few of the officials who hailed with delight the eclipse of the former party are beginning to change their tune somewhat. They were quite pleased to have the party that believes in "squeezing" in power, and to heartily practice that Celestial art without let or hindrance. They, however, did not bargain for the atmosphere of restlessness and suspicion which now pervades the palace, causing its inhabitants to take fright at almost anything. Downright bad officials who are able to diagnose accurately the present temper of their superiors are not averse to taking advantage of it to wreck the careers of men who stand in their way. The accusing and counter-accusing which is going on is doubtless making many apprehensive as to their future, so that honest magistrates—and there are such—and bad ones are alike to be pitied at present. Some who have sought to protect and indemnify native Christians who had suffered loss at the hands of the Boxers had some good stiff adjectives thrown at them, while some who did nothing have met with similar treatment. After all, the lot of a Chinese mandarin is not an enviable one. Frequently, of late, our northern correspondent has heard that the Emperor has given up all thought of reforming his country, and has once more settled quietly down, under the domination of the clever Empress Dowager. If all reports be true, till quite lately he had maintained a vigorous protest against the doings of his aunt, and denounced the retrogression carried on in his name. It may be that he has found out the uselessness, under present circumstances, of openly opposing the current of conservatism which flows so strongly. Besides, he may not fully relish the way in which his death is spoken of, nor the pleasure with which the near prospect of that event is contemplated by those around him.

Kipling and British Public. London, May 3.—The Daily Chronicle publishes an interview with Rudyard Kipling. When asked to what he attributed the British military unpreparedness, he replied: "Mainly to the great British public, who have never taken the army seriously, and who have thus unconsciously encouraged the system of playing at soldiers; to people who have objected to rifle ranges, because they made a noise, or were dangerous to individuals who got in the way; to people who have made so much fuss about a dozen soldiers going through a farmyard as if a field-day were a bean feast, and consequently helped to make proper maneuvers for many years an impossibility; and to people who think an officer a cad if he wears the Queen's uniform when not on actual duty. These have been preparing the way for Stormberg, Magerfontein and the rest. The result has been the loss of thousands of lives."

Fighting Ship Subsidy. Washington, May 3.—The foreign shipping interests opposing the shipping bill are chiefly those engaged in the trans-Atlantic trade, and they are centering their opposition upon the only American line in competition with them in the European trade, by alleging that the Standard Oil Company controls that line, which statement is absolutely untrue; by alleging that one-third of the money available will go to that one line, which is also untrue; by alleging that slow freight carriers are more useful to the nation in time of war than are fast steamships, which our war with Spain demonstrated to be untrue. It is the consuming fear of these foreign steamship lines that the bill will strengthen the American line and cause large additions to its fleet from American shipyards, and they have the best of reasons for just that fear.
