

SCRAPS

FROM THE NEWSMAN'S NOTES

While I was tramping around Maui last week after Governor Frear I kept an eye out to see how the various Honolulu papers stood on that island. The Bulletin I found everywhere, and occasionally I ran across a man who acknowledged that he sometimes read the Advertiser. But I saw no sign of the star and had almost concluded that it never reached Maui, when, alongside the road running from Hana to Wailua Gulch I saw a mail-box labeled in big, black letters, "Star."

I supposed that of course I had found evidence that this newspaper luminary sometimes penetrated to far end of Maui, and congratulated the star correspondent on the fact. But some time later I saw the word star again, on the same kind of wood and painted in the same kind of letters. Again it was on a box, but the full inscription read, "Star Korone." And I understood then that the first man had bought a can of coal oil and used the box it came in as a mail-box.

There is one member of the Governor's Maui party to whom it is not safe to mention Cripple Creek, and unless you are looking for trouble you'd better say nothing to him about high altitudes. The subject is a very painful one to him and he is liable to become nervous when it is brought up.

He is one of the six who climbed Haleakala last week when the Governor went up. When the start was made, some one asked him if he was susceptible to mountain sickness. "What? Me? Mountain sickness? Ha! Ha! Ha! Well, I guess not. You fellows will get it all right. If you are not used to high altitudes. But Me! Say, I lived for a year at Cripple Creek, 12,000 feet high. Huh!"

It's a shame to say it, but by the time the party had climbed to 7,000 feet, the Cripple Creeker was pale around the gills, and when the summit, only 9,300 feet, was reached, he could hardly sit up. And he didn't recover until the party had descended again that afternoon to the lower levels.

Mountain sickness? Huh!

Jack Altan Leonard Cholmondeley Atkinson, the rising young attorney and head of the Anti-Saloon League, has defined his position in regard to Presidential candidates. He is in favor of Taft.

This will come as a shock to the anti-booze fighters, who naturally expected that after his recent declaration of principles and the announcement of his determination to wage a vigorous fight against the Denon Rum, Jack would favor the Prohibition candidate, or at least throw his influence in favor of Fairbanks, the Buttermilk candidate.

Why he does not line up with the Prohibitionists the ex-Secretary has not yet risen to explain, but he gives his reasons for opposing Indiana's would-be Favorite Son. Fairbanks once drank a cocktail. "The man whose lips have touched liquor shall never have my support," says Jack, or words to that effect.

But just suppose someone should prove that Taft once drank creme de coroon!

Bobby Boyd, engineer and surveyor and discoverer of lost kuleanas, has taken a whole broom and swept out a nice, clean spot in one corner of the Public Works office and thrown a fit or two because the correspondent of the Bulletin learned on Maui that the aforesaid Bobby Boyd had made a bad mess of things down at Keanae. Taking his unaccustomed pen in hand, the indignant Bobby proclaims loudly and vociferously that as a surveyor he is the Real and Only, that he did not make a mess of things at Keanae, and that the correspondent who hinted that he did ought to climb onto the water wagon.

Of course, outraged Innocence may be expected to kick a little when criticized, but from all I can learn, R. Boyd was let down pretty lightly by the correspondent and ought to be thankful it was no worse. The correspondent might have told some of the other things he heard about Boyd, such, for instance, as that though Boyd holds down a job in the Works Department, his chief occupations are drawing his salary and his breath, and that his superiors are careful not to give him anything to do which he can possibly make a mess of. If some of the other remarks of some of Boyd's superiors in regard to him and his work at Keanae had been quoted against him, he might have thrown several more fits.

I wonder just how much dead timber there really is hanging on about the public offices, how many incompetents are holding down jobs which exist only as sops thrown to greedy politicians. A census of these incompetents might result in some changes which would be good for the Territory as a whole and for the Treasury department in particular.

Sixth Precinct, six delegates—Phillips, Kahalia, W. Drake, H. Kiemme, Keohokii and Joe Monoghan.

Seventh Precinct, three delegates—A. D. Castro, W. R. Riley, E. W. Quinn, John C. Lane and J. F. Eckardt. This is the first time that John Lane's name has figured in any list of Fourth District voters.

Eighth Precinct, four delegates—Clarence L. Crabbe, H. J. Baldwin, H. C. Murray and John Marcellino.

Ninth Precinct, four delegates—C. W. Booth, John Wise and Wm. Ahia.

Tenth Precinct, Waimanalo—No report.

Eleventh Precinct, three delegates—A. Lewis, Jr., W. O. Smith, S. P. Correa, George C. Sea, William E. Paikuli, Jos. G. Pratt and M. C. Amama.

Thirteenth Precinct, two delegates—No meeting.

The Second Precinct had a quiet meeting.

At the third precinct, of the Fourth, a vigorous debate ensued when Norman Watkins made a motion that delegates to the convention be instructed to vote for uninstructed delegates to the National convention. It was finally determined to leave it to the ballot to be voted on together with the election of delegates.

In the Sixth Precinct of the Fourth, where Sam Johnson ruled, Jim Quinn was made president by unanimous vote. This makes him a prospective aspirant for a supervisorship.

John Lane's name made its first appearance on the roll call of the Seventh Precinct of the Fourth.

The Eighth of the Fourth held the biggest meeting of all at the Central Fire Station, three hundred voters being present.

The Ninth of the Fourth had a harmonious meeting. Robertson's nomination, however, caused a little excitement among the politicians who were present. He was, however, endorsed for National Committeeman, as was the case in all the other precincts.

No reports were received from outside precincts.

It was a quiet night in the old "Fighting Seventh." Solomon Mahelona made a humorous speech and became the hero of the night so far as the possession of the books of the precinct was concerned.

Ben Zablan, president of the Eighth of the Seventh, resigned his position and K. R. G. Wallace was chosen acting secretary.

There was nothing doing in the Ninth Precinct of the Seventh. The meeting was postponed until next Tuesday night.

Owing to Lane's absence from the meeting place no session was held by the Tenth Precinct of the Seventh.

In the absence of the officers of the Twelfth Precinct Willie Crawford presided with Bernard Kelekolio as acting secretary. A. K. Vierra, a member of the executive committee, called the meeting to order.

Owing to the retirement of J. K. Kanepepa from active service of the Thirteenth precinct there was no meeting held there last night.
