JUDGE HART WRITES ON VACCINATION

Editor Evening Bulletin—Sir:—The accompanying letter written for the Advertiser was declined insertion by its editor on the ground that it was entirely at variance with the views held by himself on the question of vaccination. May I ask that you publish it in the Bulletin.

Yours obediently,
CHARLES F. HART.
Honolulu, Jan. 11, '10.

Audi Alteram Partem.

Editor "Advertiser":—In your issue of the 8th inst. under the heading, "Vaccination Problem," you say:

"Up to the time of the last legislature there was a compulsory vaccination law on the statute books, but the usual fight was started against it, and as a result it was wiped out and another law substituted which makes it hard for the authorities to protect the health of the children and of the community."

If, Sir, you desire the public to understand that the new law makes it difficult to protect the health of the children and of the community because of impediments it puts in the way of vaccinating children, then I must say, your dictum will appear to many as incredible as the "quackery" of the old law. That inoculating the clean, healthy body of a child with the excretions from running sores on a sick calf, can possibly conduce to the child's health, or to that of the community is, again I say it, incredible. As to the business of such proceedings preventing smallpox, let me speak presently. Solons or not, the members of the last legislature only did what the Mother of Parliaments before them had done, for in 1907 compulsory vaccination was done away with in Great Britain. That a majority of medical men think such legislation worse than foolish, does not make it so, numbers have no special merit of themselves, unless they happen to be on the side of truth. Many learned and thoughtful men, the world over, look upon the whole story of vaccination from the days when Jenner was fussing around the diseased teats of the Gloucestershire dairy maids' cows, even to these times, as an error that has proved misleading and disastrous beyond expression. Let it be remembered that, for eighty years after Munro, M. D., F. R. S., of Edinburgh, had called attention to the wrongfulness of venesection, the practice of bleeding continued, and I am old enough to have seen scores of people depleted of their life's blood. Also it is well to bear in mind that, inoculation for smallpox was practiced with the full approval of the Medical Profession for 100 years. It is now prohibited by law and its practice punished as a penal offense.

W. Scott Tebb, M. D., M. A., (Camb.), a physician, and the son of a physician, says in his exhaustive work "A Century of Vaccination," p. 403, "In due course of time the tradition of the dairy maids of Gloucestershire will take its proper place among the legends and folk-lore of the past; and if allowed to prophesy, I cannot help thinking that another generation will look back with amazement and incredulity that for 100 years the people of Great Britain should have worshipped at the shrine of a strange, unreasonable and mischievous superstition."

Dr. Charles Creighton, who for his pre-eminent professionalism and scholarly abilities was chosen to write the article on vaccination for Encyclopaedia Britannica, says, the "anti-vaccinators have knocked the bottom out of a grotesque superstition." Further says this accomplished physician, "the history of vaccination from its beginning to its present position is a refreshing illustration of the truth that medical science is human first and scientific afterwards."

Dr. Miller, an eminent physician of Pittsburg, writing to Elbert Hubbard says, "vaccination is a crime." We must defeat the effort of the man who would make sick an entire community of well people in the fear that a small portion of it may get sick. We must denounce the idea that a healthy person is a menace to anybody. We must see that our children's education is not predicated on the point of a poisoned quill.

It may, Sir, be difficult for laymen to get at the truth of the pro and con touching the subject of vaccination, especially if they have a weakness for reading medical journals. In verification of this let me mention the oft repeated statement of the immensely greater mortality from smallpox in the French army during the Franco-Prussian war, owing, as was asserted by medical journals, to the fact that re-vaccination was compulsory in the German army, but not in the French.

The figures given and repeated, ad nauseam, the world over, were 33,409 deaths in the French, while the German army lost only 308. The British National Anti-Vaccination League investigated the matter and showed it to be without foundation and untrue. Within the last few years the "Lancet" repeated the old story and was called down by the Secretary of the League. The said journal acknowledged the story had been proven untrue, and regretted its re-issuance in its columns! But the damage had been done, and the lay press vigorously again warned the public with the figures, and against the folly of failing to re-vaccinate!

And now, Mr. Editor, what can be said of this? In 1906, at the jubilee dinner of the Incorporated Society of Medical Officers of Health, of England, Baron Takaki, of Japan, stated that there were no anti-vaccinationists in Japan. Every child was vaccinated before it was six months old, re-vaccinated when it entered school at six years, again re-vaccinated at fourteen years when going to the middle school, and the men were re-vaccinated before entering the army, while a further re-vaccination was enforced if an outbreak of smallpox occurred." (See "Lancet" 1906, p. 1441).

Tolerably thorough, I think you will admit. The vaccination is done from lymph, from calves only, and which is procured from vaccine establishments owned and controlled by the government. Any attempt to evade re-vaccination at the stated period is made a serious offense and is treated as a grave dereliction against the public health, and yet, Mr. Editor, last year, the year 1908, Japan suffered from a serious outbreak of smallpox, with 15,067 cases and 5,837 deaths! The figures, Sir, are not fanciful as were those given at the time of the Franco-Prussian war, but were forwarded, on request of its Secretary, to the National Anti-Vaccination League of Great Britain, in April of this year, by Mr. S. Kubota, Director of the Sanitary Bureau, Department for Home Affairs, Tokio. Well may the words of Dr. Charles Creighton be repeated, viz: that the "anti-vaccinators have knocked the bottom out of a grotesque superstition."

In an editorial of "The Lancet" of August 1st, 1908, are these words: "The philosophy of Heraclitus as summed up in the well-known generalization 'all things are in a state of flux,' can be applied at almost any season with singular appropriateness to medicine as a science. The orthodox in medicine, both as regards theory and practice, is ever changing, since the discoveries revealed by research and confirmed by experience, when incorporated into the general scheme, necessitate the modification of views previously held, the adoption of new methods, and the relinquishing of old ones. By such means only can medicine advance as a science and achieve a truly rational basis."

Allow me, Sir to conclude with a few words of Alexander M. Ross, M. D., F. R. S. "I oppose," he says, "because forty years of practice have convinced me that vaccination does not afford the least protection or mitigation from smallpox, and because I believe that its pretext is bad in logic, wicked in morals, and futile in practice."

CHARLES F. HART.
