A production of the control of the

those whom they appoint to rule over them, which won for our fathers the smile and the bounty of Providence, and made the Declaration of their Independence an epoch in the history of man? We cannot answer such questions to ourselves without pain, and it is therefore that we would step aside from the revel of those who are only glind, and ask our readers to think, while others would bid them be proud and rejoice.

No reasonable man, we presume, regards political institutions as a good, in any other light than that of the advantages which they bring and scure. Things, and not names, are what practical men pursue, so that a curse is in nowise the less a curse, because it may be called a blessing, nor a bad government the less an evil, because it has taken a good name in vain. If a government does not, in fact, govern, but is the presture needy of anarchy and license among those who have adopted it, we may call it republican, or what we will it is non methods and the less a misfortune or a crime. If a nation shall make itself known among its fellows, merely by its power and lust of gain—if it shall recognize the obligations of the great family to which it belongs, for no better purpose that no break them—a terror to the weak and a source of disquictated even to the strong, it is soft little moment that it be baptized by a reverend namenaty, it will be the worse, for thus describation, that the length of the prompted a very curt note to the Minister of Foreign Alliance even to the strong, it is soft little moment that it be baptized by a reverend namenant that it be baptized by a reverend namenance of the mineral that the convergence of the convergence of the prompted a very curt note to the Minister of Foreign Alliance even to the strong, it is soft little moment that it be baptized by a reverend namenancy it will be the worse, for thus described the bonds of obedience to the law, to impair the public sense of right, and sap the foundations of political and social order. We do mean to say, although with sorrow, that externally our tendency has been to encroach upon the rights of our weaker neighbours, and to make them feel our power, not in beneficence, but in spoliation. And we care not whether this has been by the action of our Government, or of our people with the connivance of the Government, or in spite of its attempted restraint. The result has been the same, and the spirit which it indicates is identical. Neither do we see any excuse or consolation for these things, in the fact, that our history, in these particulars, is but the history of other nations, and that we are no worse than our contemporaries and predecessors in the world's annals. If we are no better than in the world's annals. If we are no better than the despotisms and monarchies which we despise and denounce, why go through the hypocrisy of pretending to be so? If republican institutions have no better result than the systems which they seek to supersede, why go through the bloodshed and sacrifice of winning them? Why bring them to shame, by linking them with failure and disappointment? Do we place ourselves in the vanguard of the world, only to lead it once again through the sloughs of its old Despond? Our idea of the duties imposed on us by the blessings we enjoy, is, we confess, different. We believe that, in gratitude to God, and in justice to His good gifts and to ourselves, we have to gird up our loins for a different task. We believe that our mission upon the earth as a people, is not one of vain-glorious preaching, and rampant self-exultation—but of honest, upright, manly, laborious example. Unless we work out, from our republican institutions and from our national privileges and blessings, a government which is really and practically based upon obeand denounce, why go through the hypocrisy of national privileges and blessings, a government which is really and practically based upon obe-

The result of the riots in South Baltimore has been, we are credibly informed, to put an end to the business of those who resist the demands of the conspirators. The Messrs. Skinner have been compelled to close their ship-yard, and suspend their whole operations. We learn that they con-template testing, by a suit, the obligation of the corporation of the corporation and the corporation of the corporation and the corporation are corporation and the corporation and the corporation are corporation and the corporation and the corporation are corporation are corporation and the corporation are corporation and the corporation are corporation are corporation are corporated as a corporation are corporated are corporated are corporated as a corporate are corporated are corpor out, from our republican institutions and from our national privileges and blessings, a government which is really and practically based upon obedience and respect; which honors the truth, and reverences right and justice; which despises and punishes license and corruption; which is, in fact, what it vaunts itself to be—our pride will be disreputable, and our destiny must be disgrace. Nor do we believe that we can avert these calamities, unless, with our whole hearts, we take the matter speedily in hand. Prosperity and power have made us reckless. Luxury and corruption have emasculated the stern manhood of our old republicanism. We have gone on, from step to step, so far, that we must stay our course now, or we shall have no power to arrest it hereafter.

It is for this that we have asked our countrymen, to-day, to let the voice of warning be heard with the voice of feasting, and in the pride of their private dities. Our Monarch, the People, like other potentates, has been cajoled enough by flatterers, and parasites, and court-fools. It is high time that he had learned to hear the truth, and there is from that in many respects that it must be considered original.

It was also insisted that Madame O'Connell had the right to produce portraits of Rachel, living or dead, as from Rachel's artistic eminence she was public property. It was accordingly demanded not only that the actor should be dismissed, but that 5,000f. damages should be awarded to her for the wrong done her in bringing it, and by the seizure. After hearing the public prosecutor, who declared himself in favor of Mademoiselle Sarah's action, the tribunal postponed judgment for a week.

Last year the corn crop was light, and a large proportion of it of too poor a quality to keep for market; and this year the crop will be still lighter. Altogether, the prospects for the crops this season are exceedingly unpromising.

In Jersey county, the prospect for a most abundant yield of wheat continues good. The army worm is at work, but has done no material damage. There will probably be a very good yield of corn this year, though much of the ground laid out for the purpose will remain unplanted.

The Illinois State Journal say of the whole State, that the wheat crop is considered to be good and a pretty large amount in; though the rains have injured wheat even, in many parts, not very seriously, however. The corn crop, which is the staple of the South, is unusually late, especially in the large, level prairies, and indeed, the bulk is not yet planted; while such as is planted and is up, is losing fast on account of the wet. In Jefferson, Hamilton, Franklin and other counties further South, where the lands are more undulating, the prospect is better, as there have seldom been, notwithstanding the very frequent heavy rains of the past three months, more than two or three days together during which farmers could not work more or less. It is evident there will be a considerable amount of corn in Egypt this year, although the prospect is and has been gloomy.

There is also a great deal of fruit of all kinds, and

In Jackson county the cotton crop is suffering from the lice. The oat crop is almost an entire promises indifferently. In the bottoms it is almost an entire failure, while that growing on the uplands is ruining from ravages of rust. The wheat crop is looked to with great anxiety. The corn looks well, and without extraordinary drought there is no reason to doubt a fair crop.

There never was a better prospect for crops in Iowa than at the present time. Wheat, oats and grass are doing first-rate, and corn, though late, shows every appearance of coming out well.

MINNESOTA.

MINNESOTA.

The corn is up and growing finely, and so with all other kinds of grain—oats and wheat especially look well. The promise of an abundant harvest is everywhere apparent.

Crops between Atlanta and Augusta never boked more promising. The stands of corn and otton are good, and the appearance of the plant calthy. healthy.

In the counties of Talbot and Marion the corn and cotton crops are very promising, and some two or three weeks more forward than last year; about an average of each planted compared with the last. Wheat in some localities has yielded abundantly, while in others it has proved a complete failure, in consequence of the rust and smut. Oats, in the gray lands, are worthless, having been completely ruined by rust, but in red lands they are some better, and will make seed.

AN IMPORTANT EDUCATIONAL MOVEMENT IN THE SOUTH.

An educational movement was commenced some time since under the auspices of the ten Southern Bishops of the Episcopal Church.

The design originated with Bishop Polk, of Louisiana, in 1856. During the year he succeeded in obtaining the co-operation of the Bishops of the Dioceses included within the plan, and it was subsequently fully endorsed by the clergy and laity at all the Diocesean Conventions. These Conventions appointed trustees to meet in conference and settle the plan of proceeding, and organize a system for co-operation. That Convention of trustees met on the 4th of July last, at the Lookout Mountain, in the vicinity of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee. The Bishops, with lay delegates from most of the States, and trustees duly chosen, formed a numerous body of distinguished men.

They framed a declaration of principles and basis of action for the founding of a university on an extensive scale; completed the permanent organization of a Board of Trustees and appointed Business Committees for the preparation of a charter, the collection of information on the subject of a site, the preparing of the ways and means, and the determining of the whole mode of proceedure in the work. The Board then adjourned to meet at Montgomery, Ala., in November last.

At that Convention, which was also fully attended, a site was unanimously agreed upon for the location of the University, subject only to the condition that a satisfactory arrangement could be made with the proprietors of the property, and that an act of incorporation acceptable to the Board could be obtained from the State of Tennessee.—

The title selected was that of "University of the South."

We learn that they contemplate testing, by a suit, the obligation of the corporation to give them effectional protection in life and property. The sooner that question is decided, the better, it seems to us. Business men can then make up their minds to remain or emigrate. Perhaps tax-payers will also discover, whether or not it be worth their while to scenar the contemplate testing, by a suit, the obligation of competent and faithful numicipal officers.

Many of the fabrics called wool and silk contain more of cotton than of the material of which they profess to be made, and many articles for which cotton was till lately thought to be an unsuitable material, are proved to be better made from that than from the fabrics that were originally supposed alone to be adapted to them.
